SEE Staff Picks

Thursday

Like British hip-hopsters the Herbaliser Band appear at the Rev (10708 - 102 St.) with Shades of Culture and D.U the Knowledgist. Tickets are a mere $12.

Friday

Ani DiFranco alumnus — and a darn nifty singer-songwriter in his own right — Andy Stochansky proffers his wares for your approval at the Sidetrack Café (10083 - 112 St.). Equally nifty Ottawa singer-songwriter Danny Michel opens the night. Tickets are $8.

Saturday

DJ Phat Cat and special surprise guests liven up Saturdays at Remedy (9631 - 109 St.) with an evening of electronic grooves, known to its adherents as Repercussions. So, like, check it.

Sunday

Queen of the Nazi Love Camp no more, Sheri Somerville sings under her own name (and hair) at a CD release party for her new recording, In My Arms, at Packrat Louie's (10335 - 83 Ave.). Call 433-0123 for reservations.

Monday

Myrna Loy rues the day The Rains Came (1939), the Edmonton Film Society's tropical treat showing in the Provincial Museum Theatre (124 Street and 102 Ave.) at 8 p.m. Loy finds romance with a compassionate doctor in colonial India. Tickets are $2-$5.

Tuesday

Treat yourself to a little Kink! tonight at 8 p.m. as Kimberly Carroll (pictured) assays the role of pin-up girl Bettie Page in the musical account of her rise, fall and elevation to cultural icon. The show runs on the Arts Barns' Transalta Stage (10330 - 84 Ave.). Call 448-9000 for tickets.

Wednesday

Irish music doesn't get Irisher than when its played by the world-renowned Chieftains, who take the Winspear Centre (4 Sir Winston Churchill Square) stage at 8 p.m. with guest, bad-boy fiddler Ashley MacIsaac. Call the Winspear Box Office (428-1414) for tickets.

Everyone's shopping at Pierre Trudeau!

So it looks like Chrétien might not go through with his plan of naming Mt. Logan after Trudeau. Too many geographers got upset, apparently. After all, Chrétien, ever the savvy politician, doesn't want to alienate the powerful geographer lobby.

Personally, I didn't think it was such a bad idea. I mean, who's this Logan guy anyway? Some mountain discoverer guy. I mean, discovering a mountain — how hard is that? Of all the things you could discover, a mountain has to be about the easiest. "Hey, look! Is that a mountain?" Big deal!

Now, if this Logan guy had discovered some other, subtler, geographical feature, I'd be more impressed. Like a small valley, or a really tiny hill — the kind that you don't even notice in the car, but which kills you when you're riding your bike. That would merit getting your name on the map. But "discovering" a mountain? Come on!

Anyway, what's done is done, and it looks like the mountain's staying Mt. Logan. So, we need to think of something else to name after Trudeau.

My vote's for West Edmonton Mall. It's appropriate! Trudeau had nice clothes; he liked to shop. And West Edmonton Mall's the biggest mall in Canada. Of all the malls I've shopped in I've often thought it was the most prime ministerial. Also, if we name W.E.M. after Trudeau, then when Mulroney dies we can find some crappy mall like Meadowlark and call it "Mulroney."

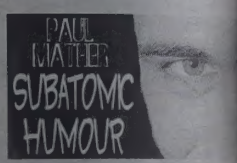
If the mall thing falls through, we'll need another option. My second choice would be changing the name of a province. Maybe just a little one, like Prince Edward Island. (After all, renaming a real province might be a bit much.)

I don't think Prince Edward Islanders would get upset. Especially if we didn't tell them. How else are they going to find out? They're stuck on that island! And, hey, bonus: people wouldn't have to buy new maps. You'd just use a felt to change "P.E.I." to "P.E.T." and — boom! — instant legacy!

If both the mall and province proposals fall through, I have a final backup option. We've already split the Northwest Territories in half once. Why not cut off another little chunk and call it "Trudeau?"

There must be an area up there where nobody lives, so nobody'd get upset. And, because they'd be drawing the boundaries for the first time, they could make the new territory any shape they wanted — like the outline of Trudeau's head.

Now, there's a legacy! Trudeau would be the first guy to actually have his head on the world map! Hell, he'd be darn near the top of the world map! That's not just a tribute, my friends: that's an ultra tribute!



Who knows what will happen? The winds of politics are fickle, fickle winds. Maybe the Liberals will ignore the vitriolic pro-Logan lobby and rename Mt. Logan after all. I hope so. But if they do, I feel that in fairness to the memory of William Logan, the least they could do is change the name of Trudeau's grave to "Logan's Tomb."

Open stage night: because everybody has a dream

They might be better off, I think/ the way it seems to me/ making up their own shows/ putting them on TV.
—Talking Heads, Found a Job

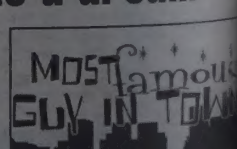
For a brief time back in the 1990s (cue music), I worked as a karaoke host. At the time it was just about the best money I could hope to make without getting my hands dirty or buying special shoes: Seventy-five bucks for four or five hours of "All right! Put your hands together for Tamara!" and making sure the levels were set so the Whitney Houston blaster didn't detonate the boss's speakers. Easy, even when it came to fending off the insistent drunks — just let 'em do My Way and get on with the show.

But just as children one day tire of renting Wildcats and move on to Big Trouble In Little China, so too does karaoke lose its appeal, unless you're one of the deluded "future professionals" who hassle the host to get the levels and echo and shit just right so you can wow the rabble with a barn-burning encore of Kansas City. For normal people, though, most of the fun of karaoke is similar to the fun of watching crappy '80s direct-to-video action/thrillers. After a while, that's pretty runny butter.

Which is why I'm really into, like, open stage these days. Seriously! It's like karaoke without . . . uh . . . without the something-or-other. The bad thing. Whereas earnestness in the pursuit of karaoke excellence is tragic, earnestness in the pursuit of open-stage kung-fu is somehow noble. 'Cause it's possible to believe that the open stage is like a workout gym for folks who might one day actually do this for, y'know, money. From the guy so mellow he makes Jim Croce look like Sammy Hagar to the guy so raw he makes Sammy Hagar look like Jim Croce, the Ani girls and the blooze combos, the bongo players and the Latin lovers, the dude who reads poetry and Daniel — it's fun. You should come out some time.

And hey, speaking of Finn's — whatever happened to that rumour from a few years ago to the effect they were going to gut the place, renovate and swankify it, and turn it into a gay bar?

And hey, speaking of gay bars (if only text could convey inflection!), I see there's something new coming into the Dead Zone. You know the place: right beside the Princess Theatre, prime retail/entertainment location, no reason for it not to be a money factory. Except, for some reason, it's like one of those spooky forests in bad fantasy novels. No birds. "Phatz" was last in there and before that it was "Tam O'Shanters" (ugh), and before that a bunch of other places, and before them . . . what? An Indian burial ground? Brr.



Anyway, I saw the beginnings of a sign going up the other day. By the time you read this, we should know who's decided to ignore the ravings of the crazy old janitor and set up shop. Hell, by the time you read this they could have already had their grand opening. Hell again, by the time you read this they could already be out of business.

Note to new owners: if you're a bar or restaurant, have open stage instead of karaoke. And if you're a clothing store or boutique of some sort, that goes double. C'mon! How cool would that be? Lock up the merchandise, BYOB and let the good times roll!

Million Family March a let-down

BY MINISTER FAUST

In 1995, the American press trembled at the juggernaut of one million African men headed to Washington D.C. for the Million Man March. Their hostility was obvious: denouncing the MMM convener, controversial Nation of Islam (NOI) leader Minister Louis Farrakhan; balking at the called-for number of one million; desperately seeking signs of division in the African-American population and intelligentsia.

What happened surprised the hell out of them. One million men did attend and it became the largest gathering of Africans anywhere in human history. Damn, it was good, and I was there, inspired and exultant in the mission of the renewal of African communities and African men in particular, for the Day of Atonement, the subtitle of the march.

Reverend Jesse Jackson detailed racist power in economics, the prison-industrial complex and media. He called for "the next march" to be on Wall Street, in order to combat the capitalists who moved from investing in Apartheid to the new American slavery, the private prison industry. Jackson also became one the greatest and most principled critics of the march, stating the MMM failed to advance a clear government social policy imperative and that the organizers had negligently squandered a massive opportunity. I understood Jackson's critique but was so moved by the call for redemption and the experience of one million of my brothers together in peace and joy and defiant declaration that I felt then, and now, that the MMM created a substantial psychological victory of legendary power. But when the all-inclusive Million Family March was announced, Farrakhan conceded Jackson-style criticisms were legitimate. He and a team of advisers created the MFM National Agenda, a document dealing with the specifics of how U.S. policy hurts the poor and maintains race-class privilege.

Because the NOI newspaper and its on-line edition made repeated and laudatory references to Ralph Nader's progressive campaign for the American presidency and because rumours indicated Farrakhan might make an endorsement during the march, I was hopeful that the synergy of a million attendees of all backgrounds, a mass-television audience, a drive for voter registration and the possibility of Nader and running-mate Winona LaDuke, could produce a breakthrough moment in U.S. politics — a presidential victory for a U.S. progressive of indisputable integrity. But there was no Nader. Within five days of the march the MFM's enthusiasm seemed to have become stonewalling or frustration. The Greens were still pushing to get LaDuke, but were silent on Nader, saying only that "Ralph won't decided until the last minute."

I don't know which side rejected or felt rejected. All I know is that the Million Family March failed to grow upon the foundation of the 1995 MMM. Speaker after speaker extolled the value of the family and the importance of anti-racism, but almost none made specific references to policy, law, or the means by which to force changes. General calls to "clean up your act" did not address how to change a system that creates the crises in the first place.

Farrakhan's MFM address was firmly anti-racist and anti-sexist. Yet in response to the U.S. election a mere three weeks away, all he said was that, in the future, his own hoped-for coalition would punish any party (i.e., either half of the Republocrats) that failed to lived up to its promises to Black, Brown and poor White voters. Farrakhan left voters to do what they were already going to do: vote, or not, according to their pre-existing opinion. He squandered an important chance to influence U.S. society and brought a million people to D.C. for a feel-good rally.

During the 1960s, Malcolm X and Martin Luther King were working on a united front that was shaking U.S. power to its foundations. Both were assassinated under circumstances that many argue bear the fingerprints of U.S. intelligence. They were killed because they posed a threat. But ultimately, neither the MMM nor the MFM posed any threat.

Perhaps that's why the D.C. media only discussed the MFM as a traffic hazard and not a political bombshell. The ultimate sign of the march's failure is its acceptance by U.S. power.

Daughter tries to help brain injured persons

Editor, SEE:

On Oct. 25, 2000 a focus group for the Alberta Brain Injury Initiative will be held by an independent consultant to determine the needs surrounding brain injury survivors in Alberta. I have been fortunate to be invited to attend this focus group to be a voice for my mother who is brain injured. The main problem I have found in researching information to provide this focus group is that NO ONE, knows what kind of numbers we're dealing with. Where are all the brain injured people in Alberta?

I have contacted Capital Health Authority, the Glenrose Rehabilitation Hospital, the University of Alberta, Excel Resources Group (which provides housing for special needs individuals) and NABIS (Northern Alberta Brain Injury Society). Not one person out of the 10 that I spoke with can provide me with any kind of estimate as to how many people need help and where they currently are residing.

My mother is one of these survivors. Since 1992 we have been through two rehabilitation facilities, four group homes and three extended care centres trying to find a place for her where her special needs are met and where she can thrive in her environment, despite her limitations. Can my mother be the only person in Edmonton who is living in an environment that is unsuitable to her needs?

It has only been through my personal need to find a solution to my mother's living arrangements that I found out about the focus group being held on Oct. 25. I was referred to the Minister of Health office by a contact at the Glenrose Rehabilitation Hospital. When I called the Minister of Health office I was told that a press release was sent out on approximately Sept. 25, 2000. Most of the major newspapers that were given this press release chose to ignore it and did not print it. When I contacted the Edmonton Journal, the response was "with Trudeau and everything else, it wasn't considered important." Those of us who live and work with brain injury survivors know how important this is.

On Oct. 25 I would like to be a voice for those who do not have one. If you are a family member or friend of a brain injury survivor, I would like to find out what your concerns are and how you feel the needs of the survivor could be better addressed. Please submit your information and suggestions to braininjuryhelp@powersurfr.com or if you do not have access to e-mail, please contact Ginny Gillen, director of NABIS, 479-1757.

Who benefits most from vaccines?

Editor, SEE:

I recently had the opportunity to read an article in your fine paper (Oct. 5 - 11 edition) titled the Politics of panic infect vaccination program.

It is interesting how pervasive the "health authorities'" fear-mongering and scare tactics really are. They have our province's mothers in an uproar, each rushing their children in to be vaccinated against some real or perceived threat. These are just the methods that these fear mongers rely on to keep us, the unwitting consumer, coming back to swallow our pills. It makes good business sense.

It isn't much of a secret anymore how much of a big business the drug industry has become and it seems, from one point of view, that our doctors have become little more than prescription writers for the pharm companies.

With our culture so filled with habitual drug-takers, it is not hard to see how so many of us live our lives with compromised immune systems. I guess taking harmful chemicals seems like a good idea if it relieves that headache or those cold symptoms. It's sad to see that so many of us have been deceived and hypnotized by these fear mongers. I agree, though, that we should prepare for another pandemic of some sort, because we are certainly prepared for it.

Where there's smoke . . .

Allan Bolstad may have public opinion on his side, but his opponents have deep pockets

BY ANDREW HANON

Joan Dickson doesn't smoke. She quit years ago and nowadays hates being around smokers. Nevertheless, she spends several evenings each year in an environment so thick that her throat and eyes sting for days afterward.

And she wouldn't have it any other way.

Dickson is a board member of the Allendale Bingo Association, which raises $15,000 a year for Baseball Alberta. Without bingo revenue, Dickson argues, registration fees would soar beyond the reach of many families. "I'm a single mother," she said. "I wouldn't have been able to put my two boys in baseball."

Dickson is one of a small army that is mobilizing to descend on Edmonton City Hall on Oct. 26, to square off against anti-tobacco crusaders and proposed new restrictions on smoking. The issue is so contentious that the public hearing is expected to take up to two days.

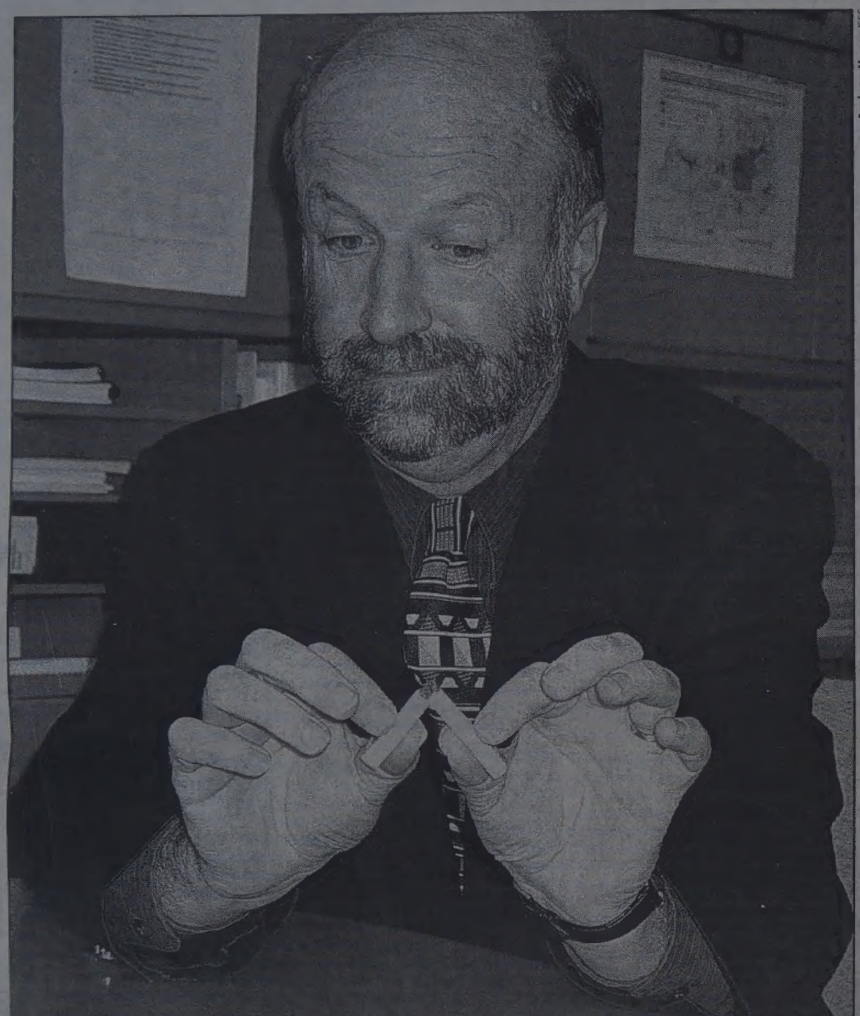
We're looking for a market-driven approach. By doing this, they're creating an uneven playing field.

~ Jason Simmonds
Boston Pizza franchise owner

City council is considering, among other things, an outright ban on smoking in restaurants and limiting smoking in bingo halls to areas that are physically divided and separately ventilated, which Dickson argues would be so expensive that it is, in effect, a ban.

"Bingo players smoke," she said. "If they can't smoke, many won't come."

Opponents of the plan have formed an odd coalition of pragmatists like Dickson, who are fighting to protect a cash cow, and idealists such as Matthew Johnston, a right-wing operative who worked as Stockwell Day's Northern Alberta organizer during the Canadian Alliance leadership race. Johnston, a strong supporter of Mike Nickel's mayoral ambitions, sees the issue as a struggle for democracy. A self-described radical libertarian, he is executive director of the Canadian Property Rights Research Institute, which defends what he considers the cornerstone of democracy: the right of citizens to do as they please with their private property. When the notion of tighter smoking restrictions was hatched last spring, Johnston leapt to action, quickly forming the Hospitality Edmonton Coalition, consisting of restaurant, hotel and bingo associations. He even approached local church organizations on the premise that private property is a Biblical tenet (at the time he spoke with SEE Magazine, Johnston hadn't heard back from any local churches).



Andrew Hanon/SEE

Lips that touch cigarettes will never touch his: Coun. Allan Bolstad wants a ban on smoking in restaurants and bingo halls to protect children from carcinogens.

Johnston's strategy is to keep debate focused squarely on property rights. He knows that once anyone starts talking about health, it becomes a visceral argument his side can't possibly win. Smoking kills people and second-hand smoke kills innocent bystanders. Faced with that knowledge, who wouldn't want smoking banned?

City councillor Allan Bolstad, the driving force behind the proposal, knows he has public opinion squarely on his side. In the past six months city hall's Citizen Action Centre has taken more calls from residents on the smoking ban than any other issue, more than twice as many as those calling about city councillors' pay raise and nearly four times as many as calls about the hated cat bylaw. Of the 2,662 calls regarding the smoking ban, 2,049 supported Bolstad's plan, 595 opposed it and 18 were undecided.

Bolstad stands to gain a lot from this fight. The former reporter has campaigned against smoking for his entire adult life and would consider a victory one of his greatest achievements in public office. "I've been watching for years as more and more smoke-free spaces opened up and I've always thought that if I ever had a chance on council one day to move that along, I would."

But Bolstad's stand has also exacted a heavy toll. Johnston warned that politicians who support the ban will face the wrath of the hospitality industry during next year's election. "You can bet the industry will make sure it's an issue in the next campaign and it could well determine which candidates receive their financial support."

Dickson, who lives in Bolstad's ward, has already vowed to vote against him next year.

The campaign has strained some of Bolstad's personal friendships; some neighbours aren't speaking to him any more, while some of the phone calls and correspondence he's received on the issue has been venomous to the point of abusive. The Edmonton Sun, his former employer, has taken to referring to him as Bolshevik Bolstad.

"I'm not without feelings," he said. "Some of this has been tough."

But he takes comfort in the conviction that his stand for public health is the morally correct choice. The life-long non-smoker recalled killing an hour in a Whyte Avenue restaurant recently. As he sat reading, several smokers sat down at a nearby table and lit up. "I finally had to leave, it was getting so bad," Bolstad said. "And I remember thinking as I left, 'Jeez, I hope that wasn't the time I got cancer.'"

He targeted restaurants and bingo halls because both involve children; families eat in restaurants while many minors volunteer at bingos. Asked if he plans to continue inching his agenda forward, eventually banning smoking bars and pubs, Bolstad replied: "I don't foresee myself going in that direction, but I do hope it will continue that way."

Johnston readily acknowledges that Bolstad has taken a popular stand. But, he argues, that doesn't make it right.

"There are certain things a government ought not to do," he said. "Not every issue can be argued with majority rule."

As far as Johnston and his coalition are concerned, a restaurant is private property and if the proprietor wants to allow smoking, that's his right, just as it's a customer's right not to patronize a smoking restaurant. Johnston argues that people accept certain terms when they step on to private property, such as a restaurant, and if they don't like those terms they can go elsewhere.

He gets frustrated with what he terms the use of the "for the sake of the children" mantra as an excuse for social engineering. Don't blame the restaurant if kids are forced to breathe smoky air; blame their parents for taking them there in the first place.

Bolstad counters that restaurants and stores, because they invite the public in, are in effect public places. Therefore, they should be held to the same safety standards as publicly-owned property.

Jason Simmonds foresees a day when all restaurants are forced by their customers to be smoking. But the owner of one of Edmonton's Boston Pizza franchises resents government trying to speed that evolution.

"We're looking for a market-driven approach," he said. "By doing this, they're creating an uneven playing field."

If smoking is banned in city restaurants, Simmonds said, some will lose a substantial part of their customer base to outlying areas like St. Albert and Sherwood Park. More threatening, however, is the fact that the new rules won't apply to pubs and bars, which also serve food.

He added that there are about 70 restaurants already operating in Edmonton, offering plenty of alternatives to those who don't want to be exposed to second-hand smoke.

Public transit an election issue

The civic election is still a year away, but already Edmonton voters are getting a taste of what will likely be one of the key issues in the race for mayor: the cost of public transit.

This week, amid accusations of petty vindictiveness, city council voted to forge ahead with plans to expand the LRT south from the University of Alberta to Heritage Mall. Last week, Mayor Bill Smith suggested the city should hold off on the plan, which would cost $600 million, and consider putting more money into improving the roads. His argument was that Edmontonians love their cars more than public transit.

Smith was overseas this week on city business and had asked council to postpone the LRT extension vote until he returned. When it became obvious the majority wasn't prepared to wait, Coun. Leroy Chahley, accused his colleagues of using this opportunity to punish the mayor. When Allan Bolstad, who chaired the meeting in Smith's absence, instructed Chahley to stop making personal attacks, Chahley erupted. With Bolstad trying to stifle debate, he thundered, "democracy is in question today."

"I can see this is going to be a wonderful meeting today," Chahley fumed.

Coun. Robert Noce, an LRT booster who makes no secret of his ambition to replace Smith next October, was willing to extend Smith the courtesy of waiting. The truth is, however, holding the vote without Smith deprived Noce of the opportunity to debate themayor head-on about the merits of a comprehensive LRT system.

—Andrew Hanon

At $35,000 per metre, LRT extension's pricey

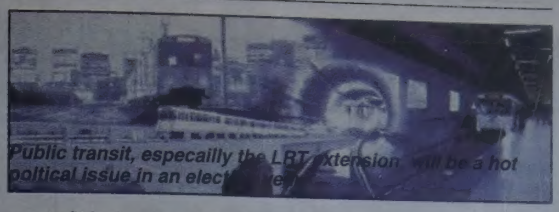
It's no wonder people cringe like they've been chewing tin foil when they look at cost estimates for extending the LRT to Heritage Mall. At $100 million per kilometre for the underground portion, which runs a mere 800 metres, and $35 million per kilometre at ground level, the numbers are difficult to comprehend.

The figures translate into $100,000 per metre of underground track and $35,000 per metre of surface-level LRT track. Expressed in those terms, the cost is easier to understand but becomes even more difficult to accept. So what's the deal — can we not buy the cheaper rails, the ones that aren't made of solid gold?

"But we aren't talking about the solid gold rails," pleads Gordon Menzies, project manager for the South LRT extension. "These are the run-of-the mill rails."

Estimates for the project, he explains, include more than rails, track bed and a bit of overhead copper wiring strung up with chewing gum and duct tape.

The start-up costs to get the LRT to ground level at the proposed Health Sciences Station, from its current depth of 24 metres, is $100 million. The shopping list includes $47 million to build an 800-metre-long tunnel, $13 million for a new station, $12.5 million for track, $9 million for a tunnel portal, $7 million for power and light, $6 million to retrofit brakes on existing LRT trains, enabling them to stop at the end of a Health Sciences -University Station run, $3 million for land purchases and $3 million for associated roadwork.



Public transit, especially the LRT extension, will be a hot political issue in an election year.

The estimates, which total $600 million, include everything that could be associated with costs of the project, Menzies said.

"They do include potential impact on road work, if we have to change an intersection. It does include LRT stations, and so in these numbers, they are typical costs per kilometre, depending on the distance between stations."

The figures also account for new transit centres to be built at the planned Neil Crawford Centre, as well as park-and-ride stations for Southgate and Heritage.

"There are also things like power substations to feed to the route, things like landscaping are included in there, and where there could be bridges. There will be a bridge over Whitemud south of Neil Crawford and we still have to go through an analysis of whether or not the LRT can cross Belgravia Road at street level."

Other considerations in the estimate are pedestrian overpasses. Tracks will run along 114 Street and 111 Street and "we need to have an evaluation of how to get pedestrians from one side of the street to the other."

Then there's the cost of new LRT trains, which cost between $3.5 and $4 million. The good news? "We won't need the new cars until we get past the Neil Crawford Centre."

Esso takes its time with contaminated site

Two years after it fenced off contaminated land at the corner of 105 Street and Whyte Avenue, Imperial Oil still hasn't developed a plan for the site, considered among the most valuable real estate in the city.

Esso spokesman Pius Rolheiser says the corporation is "in the process of developing a remediation plan for the site." That means the oil company is working at cleaning up land polluted by chemicals that seeped into the ground over the course of approximately 80 years that Esso ran a service station on the site.

The lot will sit vacant indefinitely, Rolheiser says. "It's the nature of the beast. It takes as long as it takes," he said.

Yet a local land reclamation specialist says Esso could have the property ready for development within a year.

"I think the likely scenario is Esso is going to hang with it until maybe someone comes to them with a big offer and they will do some work on it," said the geologist, who requested anonymity, fearing Esso might boycott his firm. "They could have it cleaned up in a year. But how hard are they being pushed by the city? And how hard are they being pushed by Alberta Environment? Quite frankly, because of the political game, they can't be being pushed that hard."

Real estate consultant Joe Perrin describes the plot as "one of the best commercial pieces of land in the city" and suggests the land's value at about $1 million.

Rolheiser says it's simply a matter of finding the most effective, and cost-efficient, method of cleaning up the site. Until then, the company won't consider any development, even tearing down its fence and putting in a park as an urban beautification measure.

In any event, the local geologist insists the company could move more quickly on the site, which has been fenced off since 1998.

"I wouldn't think it takes two years — but how about a couple months? Let's have a meeting. If they really wanted to get going on it they would have by now."

Dead Man Walking: the local version

No amount of retribution will heal the gaping wounds in J. Martin Hattersley's heart. Twelve years ago his 29-year-old daughter was murdered. Her killer was caught, convicted of manslaughter and has been in prison ever since. But still, if the man rotted behind bars for the rest of his days, the knowledge of that suffering wouldn't bring any relief to Hattersley.

A lawyer and Anglican priest, Hattersley looks toward Heaven for inspiration and solace. It is precisely that belief in God's redemptive power that led him to be a counsellor with Prison Fellowship at the Edmonton Institution maximum-security penitentiary.

For Hattersley, justice is not an either/or proposition. "I'm relieved every time I leave Edmonton Max and the door clangs shut behind me. But . . . I also know some convicted murderers who are now very productive members of society." Hattersley is a featured speaker at the Anno Domini — Jesus Through the Centuries film series. At 7 p.m. on Thursday, Oct. 19, he will give a brief talk prior to a screening of Dead Man Walking, a film about a nun's relationship with a death-row inmate during the final weeks of his life. Susan Sarandon plays a nun trying to convince a murderer (Sean Penn) to take responsibility for his crimes. Her primary concern is the killer's redemption and repentance.

The film's complex themes struck a particular chord with Hattersley, who said typically inmates have "no real idea of the damage they've done."

The film series includes The Nun's Story on Oct. 26, The Apostle on Nov. 2, Barabbas on Nov. 9 and Babette's Feast on Nov. 16. For more information, call the museum at 453-9100.

Baby Blue comes in many shades of music

BY CRAIG ELLIOTT

PREVIEW
Baby Blue Sound Crew
Saturday, Oct. 21 at Cristal Lounge

Attention Party People! Baby Blue Soundcrew's Kid Kut has good news for E-town's urban music fans, so if you would stop sprinkling that glittery shit on yourself for a second . . . "I'm calling out to Edmonton! Baby Blue are going to be out in Edmonton on Oct. 21 at the Cristal Lounge."

When it comes to parties, ain't nobody do you like Baby Blue. In their five years together, this soundcrew show has been on the road non-stop, perpetrating the best in hip hop, R&B and reggae on willing audiences in Canada, Bermuda and the Bahamas, as well as being crowned Canada's Urban Ambassadors on BET TV in the USA. There's but one rule at a Baby Blue party: expect the unexpected.

"Don't just think we're going to play hip hop, R&B and reggae," Kid Kut says, "because we might just break out and play some old-school funk or some oldies and goodies like Stevie Wonder or some We will, We will ROCK YOU! Music is universal. Doesn't matter if it's a black person singing or a white person or anybody — if it's dope, it's dope."

Now, with a major record deal and their recently released Private Party Collector's Edition Mixed CD soon to be taking up residence in your record collection, BBSC are setting their sights on proving that what is really dope is the Canadian urban scene.

"This is a Baby Blue compilation, but our whole reason behind getting out there and sitting in the driver's seat is to develop our Canadian scene," says Kut. "Right now, we have no outlets. A lot of artists are still in their basements, thinking, 'Why should I try so hard to NOT get played on commercial radio and NOT have enough money to do a video?'"

Big radio in Canada may only just be awakening to the possibilities of urban music, but Baby Blue's roots are in campus/community radio soil, where beats have been an integral part of programming for . . . forever.

"For the dance and techno market and all that boy band/girl band pop music, commercial radio works good for them," Kid Kut says, "but for the urban scene, like for a Jurassic 5 joint, Black Eyed Peas, Gang Starr, all the way back to Boogie Down Productions, if community stations aren't playing them, they're not getting any airplay.

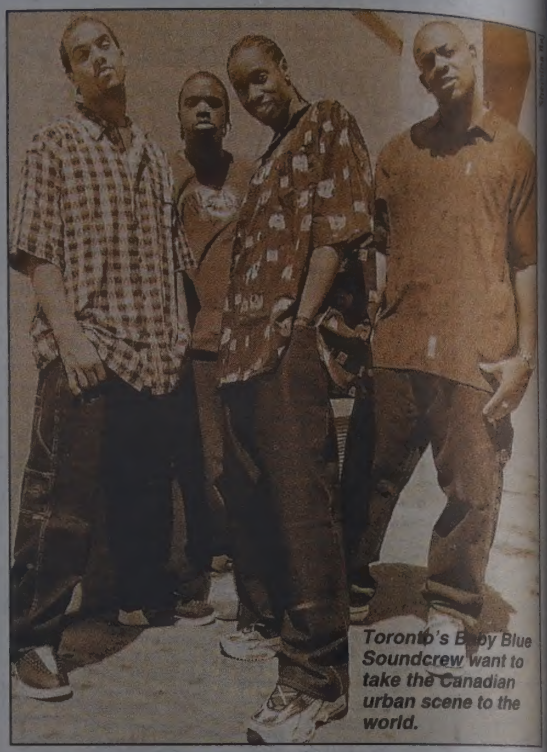
"When people come here from other places, they think Canada only has four rappers and the rest is house, boy bands and classic rock."

Kut says Baby Blue's goals haven't changed since their community radio days, only the size of them.

"People call and ask you to play a song, you put it on because you're not following any format. You make that person's day and you're educating the rest of the audience — that makes you feel good," he says. "When we started out, our goal was just to be that feel-good person. This deal is a stepping-stone for us to get to TV and bigger radio stations, where we can keep doing that for even more people. I want to be that person who makes people dance and have a good time, who lets them know what's going on across the world."

How can YOU help? Simple — just be prepared to party!

"Just come to the event with an open mind," Kid Kut says. "Tell yourself, 'Tonight's my night; I will have fun, no matter what. A good attitude and an open mind are paramount."



Toronto's Baby Blue Soundcrew want to take the Canadian urban scene to the world.

Reflection Eternal Train of Thought (Rawkus/Virgin)

Back in 1994, young Brooklynite Talib Kweli was visiting Cincinnati when he met an 18-year-old producer named Hi Tek. The two began collaborating almost immediately, left their other projects, and Reflection Eternal was born. Riding the wave of "backpacker rap" these two cats first turned heads with 1997's Fortified Live. It was an instant classic that showcased Kweli's socially conscious lyrics and the reggae-influenced beats of Hi Tek. Although MCs like Common and Mos Def were already on this tip, RE were the first to keep it hard enough to rock your forehead to your lap and all the way back. In the 2 G we find Tek and Kweli back together (Kweli was on hiatus with Blackstar and Tek has been crafting beats) and ready to do battle with anyone trying to steal their backpacks. Train of Thought is their highly anticipated début album and it doesn't disappoint. Thick percussive beats and loud staccato bass drive this album through 20 unrelenting tracks, while the lyrics touch on every issue from love to hip hop's fascination with death. The album's first single, Move Somethin', is a highly charged anthem calling on all MCs to remember that what is real really is and to keep it that way. Kweli also gets a little help on the mic, courtesy some great guests including label-mates Mos Def and Kool G Rap. The best collabo and song on the whole album arrives courtesy hip-hop vets De La Soul, which makes the CD worth the $15.99 alone. If you like the backpack sound but still need it hard, check this one out.

Cash Money Millionaires Baller Blockin' (Cash Money)

You know those albums with the guys on the cover standing in piles of iced-out rings? You know the ones with golden helicopters flying though platinum-plus high-rises that are on fire with ghetto-fabulous hoes piloting emerald jet skis through seas of Cristal? Well if you didn't know what those over-the-top albums were all about, I'm here to sort it out for you. These albums come courtesy of the New Orleans-born and bred Cash Money Millionaires.

Like every other independent rap label, Cash Money isn't satisfied with their $30-million record deal and multi-platinum success, so they have decided to make a movie. I haven't seen this movie, but it's gotta be terrible. That's not the issue here, so let's talk about the soundtrack. Well, it's terrible too. These guys can't rap, the beats are horrible, and the image is played out. The only thing that had a chance of helping this soundtrack save some face is a lot of guests. Unfortunately, none of the guests do any better than the Cash Money Millionaires. Nas is on some other shit, Eightball is terrible and E-40 is just plain weird. The only good thing about this whole affair is the introduction of Cash Money's new R&B group. They're so bad I almost pissed myself laughing.

Classically-trained Michael Kaeshammer says boogie woogie piano is the music closest to his heart.

Boogie woogie spoken here

BY SCOTT LINGLEY

REVIEW

Michael Kaeshammer
Friday, Oct. 20, 7:30 p.m. at the Arden Theatre

To hear him tell it, 23-year-old boogie-woogie pianist Michael Kaeshammer never intended to make tinkling the ivories his life's work. Be that as it is it may, there were some early indications the German expatriate, now residing in Vancouver, might cleave to a musical career path. At 13, he was already versed in classical piano, when the hand of fate tossed a catalyzing influence into his life — a record by German boogie-woogie player Vince Weber.

"I listened to that record and I never knew, I'd only heard classical at that time. I had fun doing it, but that was a live record and there's just one guy with a piano and this crowd freaking out, and I thought, 'shit, I've never heard this in my life, one guy with a piano like that.' So I quit my lessons," he said.

"The energy and the improvisation, compared to classical music, really drew me to it at the beginning, then I found all these other jazz guys besides stride and swing, but that was the start and I still love it the most today."

Within three years, Kaeshammer was likewise whipping crowds into a frenzy, but even then he never considered it as a career. When he was 18, Kaeshammer's family moved from Germany to Victoria and the young man formulated a plan of action: he'd go to school, then look for a regular job. But he also cut a solo record to see if he could drum up a little music work.

"I never planned on having a career doing this... I did this solo recording, just to promote myself around Vancouver and it ended up getting national distribution and it sold really good, and I got a record deal with this label in Toronto. It just worked out this way."

From musically inclined German high schooler to boogie-woogie piano king in five years seems like a quantum leap and fate seems to have taken a hand in shaping Kaeshammer's fate. But there are other factors in play. Modesty aside, he's obviously conscientious about not simply replicating but extending the genre in which he works.

"I don't like to play the traditional boogie-woogie stuff because it's been done. So we play a lot of original tunes and there's a lot of jazz influence and classical influence."

Boogie-woogie fans who want to see where the state of the art is at are advised to watch for Kaeshammer's third CD, which is due out any day now. The pianist travelled to New Orleans to work with players he grew up listening to, from Hammond B-3 player Art Neville to the bassist James Singleton and drummer Johnny Vidacovich, who've backed up jazz artists like John Scofield, Chet Baker and Lionel Hampton. A number of top-flight Canadian players also chipped in and the project was helmed by producer Peter Cardinali.

Or, if you can't wait for the new disc to hit stores, Kaeshammer brings his trio to the Arden Theatre on Friday, Oct. 20. Critical raves abound for his live shows, which Kaeshammer attributes to having a crack rhythm section — drummer Damian Graham and bassist Simon Fisk — and to being a crowd-pleaser at heart.

"It's very spontaneous. If you play every night and you repeat songs — say there's a song on the album that people like, you have to play it quite often — there's songs that we repeat playing and it's got to be spontaneous and play[ed] totally different from the last time we played it, otherwise people will get bored."

Kaeshammer says boogie-woogie is a musical vocabulary — it's what you say that counts.

"There's many narrow-minded — in my opinion — modern players who say, 'It's such an old form and it's so simple.' Depends what you do with it. You can play even form of music simple, but you can play interesting too. You have to relate to the audience. You can play very mathematical and try to be Einstein with your music, but you've got to relate to the audience so they enjoy your music too."

Choir's music transcends mere words

BY BRIAN GOLIGHTLY

The release in the late '80s of the album Le Mystere des Voix Bulgares is how many in the world outside Bulgaria were first introduced the miraculous vocal ensemble which will grace the stage of Edmonton's Winspear Centre on Friday night. The recordings, made by Marcel Cellier in 1975, had a devastating effect on the sensibility of their listeners. While academically intriguing for some, the actual experience of hearing this music was for many like beholding the naked flame of the human spirit as it burned in the midst of darkness. It was a mystery, because few people knew very much about Bulgaria at the time, because fewer knew the language and because through these cultural barriers, the music communicated something very human, very clearly.

Tanya Andreeva is the choir's manager and has been its impresario and protector since the days of its early KGB-escorted tours outside the Soviet Union's borders. Producer and recent collaborator Daniel Jobson credits her with the group's survival.

"It's almost all due to Tanya's foresight and resilience... For her to take the radio choir away and privatize it was a very bold thing for her to do when (Bulgaria's) democracy was still so new."

In 1993 Andreeva foresaw the demise of the country's state-supported choirs and formed the Bulgarian Women's Choir. She laughs now at a reference to losing the support of the state.

"My God, the support of the State! I knew the State could not support these choirs... on the other hand, for very small support, we had the big control of State over the choir."

"Collaborations creatively"

"Very creatively. This music was developed with the experience of generations. So this was refined, it was somehow enriched and preserved and I think the best

(has come) through the centuries. An experience of Thracia and Asia and the Slavic and the Byzantine and the Ottoman Turks, who dominated Bulgaria for five centuries."

The music was handed down from mother to daughter for generations (as it still is) when, in the 1800s, folklorists began to collect traditional songs in notational form. According to Andreeva, the fundamental shift to choral performance occurred under Soviet rule.

"It started in the early '50s when the State decided that we should have a State ensemble. The first director was Philip Koutev, who actually started arranging traditional music, which before that was monophonic. He was the first to arrange these traditional songs and write harmonies for the choir. We still have in the program some of his arrangements."

Musician and composer Eddie Jobson (Yes, King Crimson, Roxy Music), three of whose compositions are featured on the choir's newly released CD, Voices of Life, is unstinting in his admiration of the group.

"This choir is absolutely the greatest choir in the world. They keep growing and changing and showing a willingness to collaborate with different musicians... They don't throw away what's gone before; they keep it. They hold on to what they have, but they're always willing to move on."

For Andreeva, who in 13-plus years has heard the choir more often than anyone, the mystery persists:

"I don't have an explanation. It's a kind of feeling I have myself, when I listen to this music I close my eyes and this brings me up from all earthly problems. I think the music itself has much more to say than the words say.

"Very often I am asked to say what the lyrics are about. And the lyrics are really about every day problems... but still, I think many times people like the words to express exactly what they are feeling — like the loss of a child or unhappy love, or something really dramatic happening. They like the words to say this, but this is from the music that they feel this, not the words."

Donovan taps top jazz talent on A Musing

BY PETER NORTH

It's great news when an album puts the spotlight on more than just the artist whose name graces the cover and that's exactly the case when it comes to Dianne Donovan's latest offering, A Musing.

This is a disc that not only establishes the local jazz singer as one of the more creative voices on the Western Canadian jazz front, it's also an endorsement for the strong local scene that continues to be cultivated in this city.

Donovan, to her credit, knew what she wanted when it came to making A Musing and the vocalist tapped the sources that would help her create and capture what she envisioned.

Andrew Glover has been a longtime collaborator and the two were responsible for five of the compositions on A Musing. Glover was also in the piano chair for the sessions recorded in the Yardbird Suite.

Bassist John Taylor and drummer Sandro Dominelli rounded out the rhythm section, while Kent Sangster lent his sax playing to half the selections and oversaw the production of the sessions. Guitarist Jim Head sat in on the title track and Any Old Day Blues Too. Ensuring all the aforementioned musicians were caught to everyone's liking was engineer Pierre Paul Bugeaud.

Vocalist Dianne Donovan follows her muse on her sophomore CD with the help of Edmonto[illegible]

Guitar chops and pen are Fearing's writing tools

BY WARREN FOOTZ

A chat with Stephen Fearing confirms why the title of his new album, So Many Miles, is so appropriate. After a summer cross-Canada with Blackie and the Rodeo King bandmates Colin Linden and Tom Wilson behind him, he's on the road once again, this time on his own. While Fearing appreciates the company, flying solo reinforces the benefits of travelling light.

"I start thinking that the whole thing is getting pretty complicated and it would be really nice if I could just get a rental car and go. If I want to pull over to the side of the road and look at a yard sale, or have a nap or go for a meal, I can do that without running it by everybody. There's a certain simplicity to the solo thing, but generally the two of them kind of augment each other really nicely."

The new album was recorded over two nights at the Flying Cloud Folk Club in Toronto this past April. Produced and recorded by Linden, So Many Miles includes songs from Fearing's studio albums, along with a handful of new tunes. Fearing figured a live album would slake the demand by fans for a concert recording and serve as a handy calling card for the uninitiated.

Much like Bruce Cockburn, Fearing is admired for his guitar work as much as his songwriting. He says the guitar thing and the song thing go together, his instrumental skills a product of the songwriting process.

"People ask if I go home and practise at some point and I don't mean to sound arrogant but the last thing I want to do when I get home from a tour is pull my guitar out and do scales. When I'm writing a song, that's when I'm working all the stuff out, that's when the guitar parts get worked out. I'm much more about learning a piece or writing a piece and then performing that every night, and that guy takes a [illegible] the performer steps up to the stage."

Buckner up on The Hill

BY TOM MURRAY

That Richard Buckner is definitely an elusive customer. Tabbed as an "alternative country" up-and-comer after his initial independent album Bloomed, Buckner pulled a 180-degree turn on his record company, MCA. His first major label release, Devotion and Doubt, was a record akin to Van Morrisons' Astral Weeks in its intuitive musicality and free-flowing arrangements; it garnered lavish critical praise from the likes of Rolling Stone, Spin and the Village Voice. The follow up, Since, was more of a grab bag musically, with Buckner at times rearranging his songs around the inventive drumming of Chicago post rock icon (and Tortoise co-founder) John McEntire. Both albums must have seemed baffling to MCA, who in the midst of a massive house cleaning, were probably only too relieved to let him go when his contract was up. Buckner himself shrugs off the experience as a learning process. His indifference to the machinery of major labels is apparent.

"They never liked my records. They didn't know any of the musicians who played on my records; they had just never heard of any of them."

What their reaction to Buckner's latest indie release would have been is only guess.

The new CD, The Hill, is based on a favourite book of poetry, Spoon River Anthology. Written in 1915 by Edgar Lee Masters, Anthology is a moving, often devastating series of poems narrated by the 244 inhabitants of a small-town cemetery in matter-of-fact tones.

"I didn't know I was going to write it. I had time off before a tour where I checked into this hotel in the desert. I had the book, a little cassette four track and my guitar with me. I stayed in that hotel for a week; it was cheap. And I walked out with, like, five or six of these songs written. It wasn't something I meant to do; it was just that I was there and I was working. Even when I have time off, I work. I'm always screwing around with some idea. But I was on MCA at the time and I knew they wouldn't put out a record of this, because they didn't even like my own songs."

Heartbreak and loss — The Hill is a beautifully layered album, imbued with a sense of pain and loss, a worthy addition to Buckner's already impressive discography.

The 18 songs (or, more accurately, testimonies) are presented as a suite of short, descriptive passages framed by warm finger-picked guitars and the occasional snarling, buzzing distortion. Each song is only a few minutes long and they're linked by instrumental passages; Joey Burns and John Convertino from Giant Sand and Calexico fill in the gaps with cello, arco bass and subtle percussion.

"It all comes from one community, a couple of different towns, in an area of Illinois," explains Buckner. "A lot of the characters are interrelated, so it was almost impossible not to make it one piece. I could have split it into two or three pieces, but if I was going to take it that far, I thought I might as well make it one piece."

Buckner's move to Edmonton to marry his girlfriend a couple of years back caught a lot of people off guard; he himself has no regrets about adopting our city as his base of operations.

"Edmonton has been very good to me."

Richard Buckner will be celebrating the release of his new album at the Sidetrack on Saturday, Oct. 21. His friend and frequent touring partner Eric Heywood, who's also known for skilful pedal steel work with Son Volt and Alejandro Escovedo, will back him up.

Who's got the hippest gigs in town?

A true test of tenacity is tolerating the trials and tribulations of touring. Ah yes, the risk for rock bands on the road. Yet, they persevere, across this vast nation of ours, spread out across ribbons of highway that see miles and miles pass between cities. Particularly before the snow flies, this beautiful fall season that brings us crisp air, lovely colours. Okay, you get the idea, autumn is prime time for tours and there's a lot out there.

Now, The Rev has some great shows coming up, such as Sarah Harmer on Nov. 4 (with cool Nebraskan Josh Rouse), but the Urban Lounge gets the nod as the joint with the hip gigs. Double bills like Tricky Woo and Danko Jones this past week, and Halloween with Scratching Post with Robin Black & The Intergalactic Rock Stars.

"I'm really excited about the great shows we have coming up," enthuses Christine Tymchuk, the Urban Lounge's entertainment programmer. Well, she should be.

What could better than Robin Black on Halloween? Kiss, maybe, but aren't RB&TIRS the Kiss of this millennium? And Scratching Post is now one of the most popular new independent bands in [illegible].

The interactive www.scratchingpost.com site hosts an e-commerce section for selling CDs and merchandise, contest giveaways, a message board, live chats and a road diary. Scratching Post also has big supporters at HMV and HMV.com, which get plugs on the group's site. This Time It's Personal was HMV.com's top seller its first week of release. The band sold 10,000 copies, which is "indie platinum," of its last album, Flamethrower.

Scratching Post will be on Open Mike with Mike Bullard on Monday, Oct. 23; a Western Canada tour with Robin Black & The Intergalactic Rock Stars starts Oct. 27 in Thunder Bay. The tour lands at the Urban Lounge here on Halloween. The band will close the year by touring with Big Sugar.

The Urban Lounge also has the Edmonton première of Staggered Crossing on Oct. 26. This is a new Bumstead Production band, which will mean something to those who remember the formerly Edmonton-based, Larry Wanagus-owned company as k.d. lang's management. Wanagus now resides in Canada, Toronto this time, and manages Staggered Crossing along with Susan Aglukark and Big Sugar.

Staggered Crossing are a five-piece roots-rock band with an organic keyboard and guitar-driven sound. They're touring behind a four-song EP and will release their début album on a major label in early 2001.

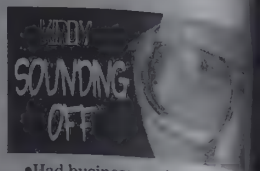
Music business entrepreneur and wise-ass crooner, Calgary's Tim Tamashiro, runs the Music Business Institute (MBI). Tamashiro offered the "MBI Challenge" to the Prairie Music Alliance during Prairie Music Week festivities. His challenge was for the PMA to give him local indie band $100 and 48 hours to accomplish 10 goals he set out. If Tamashiro lost, he was to dance the Macarena for an hour in the lobby of the host hotel.

Fortunately, depending on how you look at it, the challenge was a success, so he avoided dancing (now, that would have been entertaining).

Tamashiro was given local (Saskatoon) band The Fancy Ladds. Here is what he did for them in two days:

- Sold 54 CDs, total income: $600.
- Booked three gigs, including the Saskatchewan Jazz Festival, total income: $1,800.
- Collected 264 names on a database.
- Completed three interviews within the 48-hour timeframe and arranged three follow-up interviews.
- Received airplay on three radio stations.
- Designed, created and launched a Web site.
- Registered the Web site on 27 search engines.



- Had business cards completed
- Arranged to have the band's music distributed by Indie [illegible]
- Had the band visit all [illegible] retail stores in Saskatoon.

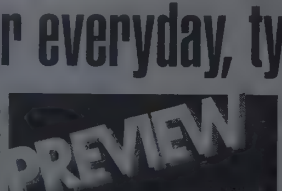
Wrekdefy your everyday, typical psychos

BY JON DUNBAR



Around half a year ago, the Edmonton punk scene went through a disturbing metamorphosis. Flight jackets were traded in for ratty jean jackets and studded leather was replaced by leopard print. Slowly, a big chunk of the scene turned rockabilly.

Konrad Andrelunas admits some personal responsibility for that metamorphosis. He's the guitarist for Wrekdefy, a local psychobilly trio that's changed the face of Edmonton music.

"It just kind of happened," Andrelunas says about the fashion change. "Two or three years ago, everyone was a skinhead. Now everyone's listening to rockabilly."

The name psychobilly is pretty much self-explanatory. It's a cross between rockabilly and punk. The defining feature of the psychobilly sound, as well as the look, comes from the stand-up bass and the stand-up bass player. As Andrelunas puts it, "It's young Elvis on the drugs of old Elvis."

According to Andrelunas, Wrekdefy is a typical psychobilly band. "The songs are about B-movies and have a lot of tasteless humour," he says. "Some bands sing shit about monsters or about raping people. We don't have any songs about raping people.

Wrekdefy gets the crowd involved in the show. There are always people jumping on stage and singing along. At an average show, someone in Wrekdefy draws blood, either from hitting the stand-up bass too hard or from a thrown beer bottle.

Andrelunas has been with Wrekdefy for six months and in that time, he's been through a lot. So far, their on-stage personae and their active audience participation has won them the hearts of music fans and reviewers. Recently, the good press got them a gig at the first annual New York City Rumble, a psychobilly festival in New York. The festival was previously held in London, but with the recent upsurge of North American psychobilly bands, it was moved to the U.S.

We have a Radiogram for you

BY CRAIG ELLIOTT

Your life is a road trip. You've got your mama's driveway to pull out of, a coffin in which you will eventually park, and just enough time to get from point A to point B. Your map can show you the places to which you can't return better than it can tell you what's up ahead, so the only thing that ever matters is where you are at this precise moment, which, of course, changes with the passing of each successive moment. You are never really anywhere. You are neither here nor there; you are Unbetween.

"Exactly," says Radiogram's Ken Beattie, punk rocker turned country gentleman, of both his album's title and most recent address. "We're all in limbo. We're all trying to get somewhere, but we need to pay attention to where we're coming from."

It's definitely easier to know where Beattie has been than where he is headed. He grew up in Winnipeg in a house full of Williams, Cash and Jones before moving to the West Coast to be in punk rock bands, the Emptys most notable among them.

Beattie doesn't feel he ever hid his 'hick' side from his bandmates; rather, he believes it has always been something he could celebrate.

"Look at Hank and George and Merle Haggard — they were hard living, punk rock living guys. Johnny Cash might be the first original punk.

Radiogram doesn't even look like a country band.

"I think things just came full-circle for me. I don't know how it sounds to say this, but I wanted to make a timeless sort of album.... It took me a year to put the band together and another year to record the record, and at the end of those two years, I realized the Emptys were in my past and I wanted to concentrate on this."

In spite of how often the c-word is used with regard to Radiogram, it was never Beattie's intention to start a country group, nor is he convinced that that is what this is.

"I guess they hear the fiddle and the accordion maybe and I guess I've got a little twang to my voice," he says, "but I hear some shades of Mercury Rev in the music, some Flaming Lips, even some Burt Bacharach sometimes.

The next album is already written and being rehearsed and will be more of an indication of intentions. In the meantime, fans can revel in the unbetween-ness of Radiogram's live shows.

"In the Emptys, it was like [illegible] get going! Onetwothree here are the chords, this is the here comes the crisp ending. With Radiogram, there's a lot more room for people to experiment. The songs still have their verses and choruses and bridges [illegible] give ourselves some space tend to be pretty [illegible] Everyone knows the songs really well and we like to step inside, let them take over."

Datsons are more than just mod

BY TOM MURRAY

Front man Trevor Anderson of Montreal mod threesome the Datsons is dismissive of any attempt to disparage his band according to shop-worn notions of "coolness." If the punk/grunge explosion of the early 1990s imparted any bad lessons, it was in the idea that dressing downwas any sort of anti-fashion statement. It's all fashion, folks, and Kurt Cobain in torn jeans is as much of a look as the Datsons in their sharp three-button blazers.

"I think image is an important aspect of pop music. All our pop icons — the Beatles, Elvis, even bands like the Ramones — crafted a stage look that complemented their music," argues Anderson. "For some reason though, in North America today and especially in Canada, image seems to have been rejected by rock fans as superficial bullshit that distracts from the music. Canadians are much more comfortable watching a band that looks more or less like themselves — the Tragically Hip, Blue Rodeo, Pearl Jam. I think that what people refer to and dismiss as fashion in music is really a band's artistic sensibility. Pop is a lot more rewarding and meaningful when it's good on all levels and image is one of those levels. Mod music is good on all levels, so it always comes back."

Anderson is e-mailing from his hometown on the eve of his band's departure for their cross-Canada tour in support of their newest offering, See. Anderson and co. are reclaiming a section of the rock world for the well dressed among us. And for the many who never lost their taste for Motown or Stax/Volt; the Datsons are a definite highlight for those of us still pining after the Jam or the early Who. But Anderson doesn't see his destiny in being a nostalgia act.

The Datsons

at the New City Likwid Lounge

"I was worried for a while that the album would be dismissed as retro. I hate kitsch in music I want to listen to bands that believe in what they play and are trying to do something new with old influences."

The new album is heavily mod influenced, but in the sense of being a backdrop to the album as a whole. It's also power pop and the crunch in the guitar indicates that the band could head in any number of directions.

"Maybe we'll end up pleasing nobody," shrugs Anderson via the wonder that is Hotmail. "We will unlikely converts — metal heads in particular, but also punks and indie types — which is good."

The essence of any good mod band is not only in its ability to rock, but to move you. And when you drop down to the Likwid Lounge, be sure to bring your dancing shoes. Anderson and the Datsons will try their best to make it a sweaty, fun night for all.

"We usually get a healthy dancing crowd (except in Toronto for some reason). I'm very passionate about the music we make being an alternative to current dance culture. I love vintage soul because it's dance music. I think rock music definitely needs to become dance-centred again. Who wants to go to a concert and just pump their fist and air guitar all night?"

WHY must you blame me for everything? Why must you say all these awful things?

SCENE Music

Ritchie harps on Irish folk tales

Not all harps are created equal. Gordon Ritchie's harp was created to play Celtic music, a traditional form that reaches across hundreds of years. But that's not to say he isn't putting his personal stamp on it. The Edmontonian harpist is actively writing Celtic harp music, recording Celtic harp music, releasing a CD of Celtic harp music and presenting a show on Oct. 20 at 8 p.m. at the Unitarian Church of Edmonton (12530 - 110 Ave.), named The Mists of Time.

For this special show, Ritchie will be joined by cellist Christine Hanson and teller of Irish folk tales Brian Kiely. Ritchie's done this sort of thing before.

"This is the second annual that we've done, Ritchie says. "It all really started three years ago with a Christmas show I produced where we have a reading of (Dylan Thomas') A Child's Christmas in Wales. Last year, as I was getting closer to publishing my book, I thought 'I need a new outlet to play some of this music,' so I thought about putting on another show."

Ritchie's plan for this show is to mix it up, playing compositions from his new CD as well as playing for Kiely's flights of fancy. The theme for the night?

"Enchantment and mystery. A lot of the stories being told are from Britain and Ireland. A lot of the English and Irish legends have to do with enchantment. We could have tricksters, changelings, the little people, stories of the sea are extraordinary. those are some of my favourites and from there you get into all sorts of monsters and magic figures."

Tickets are $8 - $12, available from Orlando Books (10123 - 82 Ave.). The show starts at 8 p.m.

A heaping Phorkful of distinctive tunes

Morinville's a tiny, quiet town that hasn't produced much of anything since its founding by a catholic priest Abbé Morin in 1892 — unless you count church building a primary industry. It's also one of the last places you'd expect to hear some metal, yet Phork have found a niche producing a blend of rapcore and metal in their home town.

" It's definitely a cowboy-hick town," says guitarist Joel Pelletier, "But people do respect us here. We gave our CDs to this gas station and later when we were driving by they had put up a sign with big orange letters, 'Phork CD available now!"

The band — and the gas station — are currently celebrating the release of 550 copies of their new self-titled CD. And what better way than with a CD release party at the Rev on Friday, Oct. 20 with buddies Indifferent and Broken Nose?

Obviously, the band is hoping their CD will get them more exposure, possibly a record deal or the chance to tour Canada, but Pelletier is still wary of outside influence.

"We prepare our songs a lot. When we write a song, we spend four months before we play it at a show. When we do play it we don't think we're ready, but we have to or we'll never end up playing it. We're not going to play somebody else's music. There's no way we'll let someone change our music to sell some records. We think of ourselves as musicians."

Snider, the creative mind behind Twisted Sister, is obviously not letting anyone or anything wear him down or persuade him to retire, including time, age, and the ever-shifting tastes of the record-buying masses. This "new" offering is a collection of Snider's old "treasures" that got shelved due to "vengeful record company politics," and now he's busting out with a new band to play old unreleased songs. Thus, the album's leading track Hard Core may have been hard core when it was written, but now it's just silly. That applies to the rest of the goofy, cock-rocking, cheese on this the album. The Sea and Cake Oui (Thrill Jockey)

Sounding for all the world like some unholy blend of Burt Bacharach and composer Lalo Schifrin, the Sea and Cake don't even bother with rocking at this point; nor do they roll or swing. Instead, they seem to have perfected the loll, a sort of leisurely momentum that resists all definition And beneath the loll, percussionist John MacEntire can set up his vaguely exotic rhythms, Archer Prewitt and Sam Prekop can work out gracefully intertwined guitar lines, and Prekop can gasp his strangled, off-kilter vocals. Welcome back to Twerpland, Canada, population: Moffatts. What's new around here? New? You're joking, right? Puberty is new, hence the effort at facial hair I'm guessing. The music is another issue entirely. With the help of Bob "I Killed Metallica" Rock, the boys have, um, appropriated the last three years' worth of lite FM radio's most cloying melodies, choruses and vocal lines and reshaped them into a thoroughly meaningless and punishingly mid-tempo album guaranteed to please any and all 14-year-old girls who do their music shopping at Wal-Mart, and anyone who's counting on those girls to pay their mortgage.

Banco de Gaia Igizeh (Six Degrees/Outside)

Toby Marks may not be the most original composer in the world of electronica, but he certainly has a knack for knowing who to borrow from From the Delirium-like prologue of Seti I, with its looped chants and swelling waves of percussion, to the meditative Sixty Sixteen, which has strong echoes of minimalist Brian Eno (compare its opening to the first track of Spinner), the new Banco de Gaia is a masterpiece of homage. Vocals by Jennifer Folker on Glove Puppet and cymbal work by Ted Duggan on Fake It Till You Make It help give it a round-the-world-in-66-minutes feel. Thus one works for me on all levels.

Amaze your friends with your intuitive powers when you foretell exactly where each drum will kick in and each chorus will crescendo without ever hearing Blender, Collective Soul's latest offering. Just don't tell them that it's predictability, not clairvoyance, that lets you do it. The only thing differentiating this from any other Collective Soul effort is the album's greatest weakness: the decision to eschew guitar hooks in favour of pseudo-electronic effects. Aside from that, the only faults with the album are those you'd expect from the band: shamelessly commercial tunes and singer Ed Roland taking it way too seriously. Collective Soul appears at Red's on Wednesday, Oct. 25.

Spin of the week!

at the drive-in relationship of command (Grand Royal)

If you needed to book an intense band for an end-of-the-world concert, at the drive-in would be a perfect choice. Their first full length album on Grand Royal is a powder-keg of Rage Against the Machine-type fury driven into a blast furnace of careening guitars, harrowing vocals and unrelenting drums. The originality of their sound lies in skillfully versatile guitar coupled with the sparing use of electronic effects. Lyrically interesting (if not always coherent), relationship of command invokes apocalyptic imagery of epic scope. An excellent album to spin while building a doomsday machine in your basement.

Shamas rises from the ashes

BY GILBERT A. BOUCHARD

Life has a nasty habit of tossing curve balls — just ask comedian Sandra Shamas. In 1995, after seven years touring a trio of wildly successful one-person plays (the autobiographical My Boyfriend's Back and There's Going to be Laundry, The Cycle Continues and Wedding Bell Hell),

REVIEW
Wit's End
At the Citadel Theatre until Oct. 21

Shamas hit a creative wall. For the first time in nearly a decade she felt drained, as if she had nothing more to say.

For an artist that's a really, really bad thing.

So, to come to grips with this personal crisis, Shamas decides to re-evaluate her existence, first taking a much-needed sabbatical. Then she goes off and buys a dilapidated farm outside of Toronto. At this point the hard-working, urban sophisticate is pretty far out on the limb and really doesn't need another curve ball.

That's when her longtime hubby Frank, the inspiration for a healthy chunk of her earlier relationship-based material, announces that he wants a divorce, forcing Shamas to move out to the country by her lonesome.

For most of us, and to be truthful, for most artists, this is the stuff of anxiety attacks and years of therapy, not the basis for a side-splitting comedy. But most of us are not the endlessly talented Shamas, who asserts at the start of her new show, Wit's End, that she was always told that one day she'd laugh at her worries. "This is that day," she jests.

The end result of a protracted period of real-life mourning and self-examination is a biting, rollicking satirical work that manages to be unabashedly honest to Shamas' tribulations without edging into self-pity. In Wit's End, Shamas manages to successfully animate a largely internal journey, a Green Acres neophyte-takes-to-farm-life misadventures aside, and make it unerringly engaging.

In part the success of this play, if not the whole body of work, is Shamas' incredible eye for detail and her ability to translate that universal stuff of life, love and mundane drudgery that fills all our days into a theatrical experience.

Shamas uses every minute of this 2-1/2-hour work to brilliant effect.

From the playful ad-libs and audience interaction to the careful attention she's taken to balance the laughs and one-liners with more quiet, profound moments, this seasoned professional knows exactly where that fine line is drawn between the sibling art forms of theatre and stand-up comedy. You just can't ask for more.

Sandra Shamas bounces back from creative and personal disaster in Wit's End.

Opera looks like U.S. elections

BY GILBERT A. BOUCHARD

The spectacle of George W. Bush — reformed alcoholic and suspected coke head — hypocritically claiming redemption and begging America's forgiveness while running for president on a record of harsh Texan anti-drug laws and a record-breaking string of executions, could be plucked out of one of Giuseppe Verdi's own operas.

A splendid case in point is the Italian master's 1853 classic, the tragic La Traviata (The Fallen Woman). It's filled with penetrating commentary about societal hypocrisy and the possibility of forgiveness, says Michael Cavanagh, Edmonton Opera's artistic director.

Cavanagh is currently putting the finishing touches on a brand new production of the famous opera, poised to open the company's 2000-2001 season Saturday, Oct. 21.

Describing the opera as a "tale of redemption tinged with sex," Cavanagh underlines the composer's fascination with the idea of true self-sacrifice embodied by La Traviata's protagonist Violetta Valery (played by Québec soprano Lyne Fortin), the "classic hooker with the heart of gold," a woman wrongly torn from the arms of her well-born lover Alfredo Germont (Gabriel Gonzalez) by his socially ambitious father.

"In the end Violetta is revealed as being more faithful to Christian ideals than the hypocritical society people surrounding her," says Cavanagh, whose production of the opera will also play at the Hawaii Opera Theatre and at the Calgary Opera.

"Our hearts bleed for her and we live vicariously through her. You watch this opera, sure that you would make the same grand gesture as her, but knowing that you don't have to."

Not only is the subject matter appropriate given the political shenanigans down south, Cavanagh says the opera itself is more than accessible, filled as it is with "all these fantastic tunes." In fact, the affable director asserts that this opera is a great work to sample if you're curious about the art form but haven't ever attended an operatic production.

The Edmonton Opera has an informal tradition of opening its season with a Verdi opera, including last season's sweeping interpretation of Aida, in part because of the composer's dedication to accessibility.

"We have four chances every year to represent the full spectrum of opera and try to present productions from different traditions, different languages and different eras," Cavanagh concludes. "It's always so much fun to start with a big Verdi epic."

Big Brother's got nothing on Betty's Summer Vacation

BY RICHARD CAIRNEY

Long before our fascination with reality TV reached new heights this summer with Survivor and Big Brother, playwright Christopher Durang was messing with the public's preoccupation with other people's lives.

Oh, there's never been a shortage of programs probing the misfortune of others at the request of viewers. Everyday news propels our spural: the televised OJ Simpson case, Tonya Harding, Paul Bernardo and Karla Homolka, Entertainment Tonight — the list is endless.

Now, the Citadel Theatre is mirroring that element of pop culture back at us with Durang's outrageous play Betty's Summer Vacation. Betty, a city gal who's looking for some quiet times at the beach, joins her friend Trudy in a time-share home near the ocean. Their housemates range from odd to bizarre: there's a horny surfer dude, a serial killer who has taken time off from killing, Mrs. Seizmagraf, who owns the house and, as it happens, is Trudy's mother.

PREVIEW
Betty's Summer Vacation
Citadel Theatre
Oct. 19-Nov. 12

Citadel artistic director Bob Baker says the initial setup seems much like any television sitcom. The characters all have desires and those desires don't mesh with the others. Hilarity ensues.

But that would be easy. Instead of playing the situation for a series of farcical dinner-theatre hijinks, Durang's script introduces Voices in the Ceiling and mayhem.

Yes, Voices in the Ceiling. "They're like a laugh track," says Baker. "They are representative of us, the public, the viewing audience that's addicted to sensationalism. They begin making demands and that's where things take off."

The Voices make themselves known initially with quiet laughter — sometimes at the most inappropriate moments. But the house guests, where maybe they should get the hell out, accept the fact that the voices exist.

Betty, the most stable person in the house and a voice of reason, seems the most likely to flee, especially when a man is killed and dismembered. But Betty's sense of decency keeps her in the house, says Stephanie Wolfe, who plays the vacationing city gal.

"People are like heroin to the Voices," Wolfe says. "They crave us. And they are looking to jack up the ratings."

"Quite shocking things happen," adds Baker. "And the voices want more and more and more — they enter the room and demand more salacious entertainment . . . TV doesn't go this far, even if the audiences want it to."

As events roll along and the stakes get higher, Betty feels it's important she stay.

"The next thing that happens in the house is more important than the last thing that happened. So you get swept up [illegible]. Betty has [illegible] at their core all these things are good and she's trying to bring them down to earth."

Baker has made some clever choices in casting the play, joining Wolfe are Marianne Copithorne, Peter Huck and Esther Purves-Smith. Also on board are Jeff Page, Josh Dean, Jeff Haslam, Ron Pederson and Cathy Derkach, all of whom are regulars with the Die Nasty! improv show.

That improv background has helped Baker says, because the performers are so willing to accept anything and everything that happens. "You can't play absurdity on stage," he said. "You can only play truth. If it's truth in absurd situations, then you've got it. And these guys are so willing to accept any idea and treat it like it's real."

Comedy Fest II lineup announced

Last year's inaugural Comedy Arts Festival was so much fun, organizers David Cheoros and Pamela Anthony have decided to do it again.

"It was a very good year for us — it was really heartening to see the kind of response from the community," said Cheoros. About 3,500 people took in nearly a dozen shows, including a variety show taped by CBC and broadcast twice since then.

This year's festival runs Jan. 23 - 28, with a few minor adjustments to the way the event was produced last year. This year's version includes visual arts exhibits and possibly a staged reading at the Stanley Milner Library.

It also includes some big names. The event brings in its first international performer, comic actor Ken Campbell, in conjunction with Daniel MacIvor's da da camera company and Calgary-based One Yellow Rabbit's High Performance Rodeo festival.

Campbell performs his new one-man show The History of Comedy Part I: Ventriloquism.

Other performers include Shannon Calacutt, whose play Burnt Tongue was a Fringe hit, with a follow-up show entitled It's Me, Only Better; comedian-story teller Doug Curtis (last seen at the Fringe performing ParaNormal with Peter Moller and Lester Quitzau) will hit the stage and Bridgitt Gall will stage her one-woman show Joan of Montreal, about a woman trying to break into junior hockey in the hockey Mecca of Montreal.

A variety show, held at the Winspear Centre, will once again be taped by CBC TV and will be hosted by Gall. A house band will include locals Andrea House, Darrin Hagen and Paul Bellows. Other local performances will include Atomic Improv performing a Similar Cast, in which they dub in lines for an old movie they've never seen.

"It'll be devastating," said Cheoros.

Being able to work with groups like OYR MacIvor's theatre company and, of course, to land tapings by CBC TV is perhaps an unprecedented achievement for a new festival.

Especially one held in January in the North.

"People have been treating us as though we've been around a lot longer than we have," Cheoros said. "It's been tremendous."

Accident at Betty's summer home

The show must go on, and it will at the Citadel Theatre, despite the cast literally bringing the roof down on the set of Betty's Summer Vacation.

Two cast members were taken to hospital on Friday 13th, a day before the production opened for preview showings, when part of the set crashed down on them.

At the one point in the play the roof of a house is lowered to stage level. During rehearsal last week "it came down too fast and the actors were still in their spots," said Citadel publicist Troy Funk.

Does that mean the roof fell on the actors?

"Well, I wasn't there," explained Funk. "But it came down too fast."

Fast enough, in fact, that actors Cathy Derkach and Jeff Dean were taken to hospital by ambulance.

The performers were given a clean bill of health but the play at the Citadel was still being examined closely a day before the play's official opening on Oct. 19.

"They had an engineer in during the weekend and looked it over," Funk said.

"It's one of those freak problems, but thankfully nobody was hurt. The show will go on."

Betty's Summer Vacation plays at the Citadel until Nov. 12.

Stage Actors learn to play in front of camera

Edmonton's actor population is clearly burgeoning, given that the number of live theatre venues here is pretty much tops in the nation.

But acting for stage and acting in front of a camera are very different things [illegible]

So local actor/writer [illegible] has pieced together a series of workshops for stage actors to equip them with the skills they need for on-screen [illegible]

As part of the [illegible] there's an almost-free question-and-answer session for those who have questions about acting for TV and movies.

On Oct. 23, Mo Mardirossian and Joshua [illegible] co-producers of the local television series Mentors, will dispense wisdom to local thespians.

"Almost every actor in town has auditioned at one time for Mentors," said Huff. "But it is rare to be in the same room as the person who is making the casting decisions. Actors should be able to ask them questions about what they are looking for, what they like to see and what they don't like to see."

The session will be held at FAVA (9722 - 102 St.) at 7 p.m. Admission is $3.

It is the first of three [illegible] sessions. The next is slated for Nov. 6, when casting director Geraldine Carr and film director Mark Slippe will take questions. The final session features Great North Productions CEO Patricia Phillips and make-up artist Prudence Olenik.

Huff says the Q & A sessions will help strengthen the skills of local actors and could make the city a more attractive location for film production.

"Edmonton is mainly a theatre town for sure and the film scene is rather sad right now," she said. "But I am hoping we can affect some change."

Vreeland a bit much for the parka people

REVIEW

Full Gallop
Shadow Theatre
(10329-83 Ave.
until Oct. 29

You know you're in trouble when the only people in the audience who are laughing are the company artistic director, the production director and the lighting and sound man. You wonder what has struck everyone else mute at exactly the same moment.

But if you are Coralie Cairns and you are performing Full Gallop, a one-woman show, and you are totally in character, you ignore the potent silences, the scanty audience, and you carry on. In fact, you probably push your character a little bit farther. And still, silence. But not for lack of trying.

Shadow Theatre's production of Full Gallop is a curious choice. Directed by John Hudson, this show is about Diana Vreeland, a New York fashion queen and editor of both Harper's Bazaar and Vogue. Her life, or at least her waning career, is the subject of this painfully drawn-out one hander. For more than an hour, we are exposed to Vreeland's pronouncements on colour, textures and fabrics, her false platitudes with friends and her deluded notion that she is still the Goddess of high society's high style.

Cairns' monologue shows us a penniless, pompous has-been whose sharp tongue and tough-minded opinions on the fickle world of fashion overshadows her vulnerable heart. The question is, is Vreeland's life and the very nature of fashion enough to carry a 1-1/2 hour tirade when the conflict and tension are so obviously within the character herself?

Cairns is certainly up to the challenge. As an aging fashion plate denying her own circumstances, Cairns does admirably. She rants, she expounds, she reminisces, she contrives, she waxes eloquent and, in doing so, Cairns reveals an intensely complex character on the cusp of — and struggling mightily against — a new era.

Maybe the subject Vreeland is defending is too trite and facile. Maybe New York fashion and the icons and divas that go with it aren't important enough to an Edmonton audience, which struggles to determine gender, let alone style, in our basic blue-jeans clad, parka-wearing clime.

To Coralie Cairns and the disembodied voice of her maid Yvonne (Twilla MacLeod) I will extend congratulations. This production, with a lesser cast, would have been a bomb. As it is, Full Gallop is simply a fashion faux-pas.

When you wish upon a scar . . .

Branding remains outside the "mainstream" of body modification

BY CHRISTINE CHOMIAK

Back in the 20th century, body art made its move from the underground to the mainstream, much to the chagrin of many parents. But these days, no one really takes a second look at the folks sporting multiple piercings or a bevy of tattoos. As these forms of body modification have moved into the light of day and even become somewhat trendy, branding remains just on the edge.

Spend any time on a farm and you would think branding as only something you had to do to cows. But according to branding artist Tania Bystedt at Body Temple, this form of body alteration is definitely increasing in popularity.

There are several ways branding human skin can be done. Strike branding is the traditional way. It involves taking several pieces of metal, bending them into the shape of wanted brand, then heating up one piece at a time with a blowtorch and placing it on the skin.

"It's not like cow branding. You can't just do one (strike) because people don't have a totally flat surface on skin. It's actually a really long process and hurts a lot more, and is not as accurate," say Bystedt.

Bystedt's favourite procedure though, is electro-cautering branding. It uses an electric scalpel cautery. A point heats up and the artist can "draw" on the skin.

"I love doing cautering. It looks really nice and you can get a lot more detail and it's not nearly as stressful or painful for the person getting it done."

Because what ultimately is forming is a scar, the end product depends on how you heal. Bystedt takes a look at the person's old scars so she can determine that. However, she is wary branding just anyone. She makes a potential brandee wait so she/he can think about if a brand is really for him/her because, "it is a scar and people look at it differently."

While branding has yet to make more of a mark for itself, piercing remains almost a mainstay of body modification.

Body Temple's Taylor Bailey has been piercing for the past five years. From navels and tongues — the most popular regions to get pierced, but says "nothing is strange anymore. When I started, there definitely was."

Electro-cautering allows the branding artist to "draw" designs right onto the recipient's skin.

He's pierced people who are 45-years-old who have always wanted to get their noses done. "It is, to a point, a trend, and that part is going to die off, sooner or later, but the people who are really true to it will be around for it. A lot of times I've noticed people come in with one opinion why they wanted something done and it totally opens their mind to what they can do with themselves. It's claiming your body."

Just remember, there are always precautions you have to consider before getting any sort of body modification done. It's up to you to find out about the artist and the procedure you want done. You have to look at the credentials, look at your artist's portfolio and talk to people who have had work done by the artist you are considering. After all, their signature is going to remain on you for quite some time.

You always want a sterile procedure with branding. And, make sure you follow the advice of your piercer and brander during the healing process. As with tattos, the care put into tending the recently-made marks has a strong bearing on how the finished product will look.

Branding creates a scar that can't be removed. Covering it with a tattoo is the only way to eliminate any trace of it if you don't want to wait 10 or 20 years to see if it will fade.

Reputable artists will have no qualms turning potential customers away if what they want won't fly, which is of course how they stay reputable.

"Some people wanting a piercing think of it as a 'how freaky can I be' competition. There's a lot of piercing that doesn't get done for good reason," says Bailey, "like elbows and chins."

Stakes too low in political witch hunt

But some gritty performances elevate The Contender to respectable status

BY STEPHEN NOTLEY

The current American election campaign has made politics so dull, it's hard to remember that only 1 1/2 years ago they were sleazy. It's a tribute to Clinton's presidency that barely anybody even thinks about the sleazy, sleazy hypocrisy of the impeachment hearings anymore. Luckily, with The Contender, Hollywood's ready to remind us that it's not okay to dig around in somebody's bedroom just because you don't like his (or her) politics.

The Contender is not a subtle film, especially not with Gary Oldman as the reptilian bad guy Shelley Runyon. He chairs the committee that's supposed to confirm Laine Hanson (Joan Allen) as vice-president, but as it turns out, he's evil. He tries to blow her alleged three-way in college into a Lewinsky-style scandal, but Allen refuses to be smeared and insists on keeping her private life private. And thus the drama.

Considering how much The Contender owes to the attempted Clinton impeachment, it's curious how little it resonates with the issues the impeachment raised. The people who went after Clinton did so because they hated him and they were willing to use anything, even his private life, to try to bring him down. The Contender does address that idea — "It's not okay for them to ask" is Hanson's oft-repeated defence — but it's much more interested in raw sexism.

Runyon is after Hanson because he doesn't think a woman should be president. And the towering hypocrisy of the film is supposed to be that nobody would think twice if it were a man who'd had the three-way in college.

The problem is, nobody thinks twice anyway. Nobody in the film is truly outraged by Hanson's alleged indiscretion and neither is anybody in the audience. And does anybody really think a woman can't be president?

The scandal is a non-issue. The stakes are low. The ultimate political principle the movie stands for — a woman's right to be president — isn't controversial. And the ending is a laughable plot twist.

And yet, somehow, The Contender still serves up some half-decent moments. How?

In two words, Joan Allen. She's lightning on screen, whether it's as a conflicted '70s housewife in The Ice Storm, or as John Travolta's unsuspecting wife in Face/Off. She's simply never bad, and even the silliness of The Contender can't bring her down. She carries herself with quiet dignity throughout and somehow she makes parts of this film powerful.

There's a scene where she faces Runyon. She's got mud to pitch at him if she wants. She struggles with whether to do it. Her principles fight over the corners of her mouth and the glint in her eyes and it's electrifying.

And with Allen keeping it alive, a couple of other actors acquit themselves admirably as well. Christian Slater plays a young congressman as a touchstone of decency and he pulls it off.

Joan Allen is striking in The Contender.

Gary Oldman, meanwhile, blinks and smacks his lips and scratches his bald spot and brings his usual gusto to the role of the bad guy. It's not brilliant, but it's fun.

As far as political movies go, The Contender doesn't thrill. It's not as lifelike and human as Primary Colors, or as directly satirical and media-obsessed as Wag the Dog, or as deliciously dirty as Election. It's really mostly a big mess. And yet, almost despite itself, it's kind of watchable — even if only in comparison to Bush/Gore.

The Contender ★★★ (out of five)

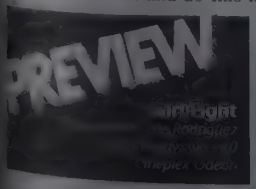
Rodriguez stings like a she

BY CYNTHIA AMSDEN

Michelle Rodriguez, the gun-metal tough chick from Girlfight, might just as well have stepped off the big screen and into the Toronto International Film Festival. Her rawness is immediately palpable. Girlfight is a smartly written, smartly directed film about Diana (Rodriguez), a fiery, young woman who finds discipline, self-respect and affection in the boxing ring. Acclaimed from Cannes through to Sundance, it was one of the solid hits among this year's offerings at the Toronto festival.

"Sorry I'm late," Rodriguez says, as she rushes into the room and instantly lights up a cigarette. She regards the roomful of journalists with the same half-squint/half-pout she takes on in the film just before she bites down on the mouth guard.

"I was playing this stupid chess game with the computer and it kept messing up on me. They told me I had to come down and do this interview. I don't know. Maybe it was my mistake and the computer's all right."



She's beautiful, but not in what Rodriguez would call a girlie-girl way. Hear youthful features belay a wisdom — not a seasoned wisdom, but rather the tough kind. The first question is about her smoking. After seeing her physical transformation into a buff fighter on screen, a cigarette is the last thing you'd expect from her.

"I did smoke during training. Five cigarettes at most a day. I'm not like a (here she imitates a chain smoker affixing their mouth to the exhaust pipe of a car). It's not to do heroin than that."

Training was tough. Four plus months of boxing, weights — two hours a day, five days a week built up to six hours a day, six days a week —and all the pasta and protein she could eat. She possessed the manic enthusiasm of an actress making her début, which is exactly what she was doing.

"I trained like a dog. I gained six pounds and it was all muscle."

And she took hits to the face. Michelle Pfeiffer, this isn't. "I'd do the scenes with the professional boxers and they're kind of used to hitting people when they get in the moment. It's painful. Try and imagine sneezing with your eyes closed. It's that kind of flashing light, and there's a lack of oxygen for a moment and you've got the impact."

Prior to Girlfight, Rodriguez's major claim to fame was For Love of the Game, where she sat in a crowd beside a cardboard man. Love that Kevin Costner.

She had left acting to write, but found that while learning about the pyramid process of the industry, her career was stagnating.

"After a year, it became monotonous. But I was doing it because I didn't have the balls . . . well, that's one form of expression. Okay, I didn't have the guts . . . Oh! another one. What was it I didn't have? The confidence to go to an audition and have someone judge me. But I saw this audition when I was roller-blading in New York, I got there an hour and a half late and I walked in with a pessimistic attitude. That's the secret."

It's difficult to pin down if the freshness of Girlfight relies on the dialogue, written and directed by Karyn Kusama (her first feature), or from Rodriguez who sets the tenor of the film.

"I had less than a month's training for internal acting. I had to be taught to internalize. Like, it's all in the eyes." Her eyes become key throughout the story.

Without question, there is a freshness to her personality. She's more relaxed with the press than the Elizabeth Shues and the Heather Grahams of the world. And the success of Girlfight has given her clever insights she's not afraid to share.

"Yes, it's opened a lot of doors. It has its pros and cons. It's a very superficial world. I mean, I see a lot of people smiling at me with their own intentions and they could be very selfish intentions and they could be very pure, but the majority of the time, it's a real turnoff to see people acting on their free time."

Had Rodriguez opted out of acting, as she once planned, it would not have silenced her.

"I'm very passionate about expressing myself loudly before I die. That's my whole purpose."

Shower is gallingly tepid

BY LYS WOODS

One of WKRP in Cincinnati's ongoing jokes was the lack of hard-hitting commentary in Mr. Carleson's editorials. As manager of the station he felt obligated to perform them, so he would jump off the fence to tentatively state that drinking and driving is not such a good idea or, in a more daring instance, he came down adamantly in favour of spring. Shower is the cinematic realization of Mr. Carleson's editorials, a film so reticent to take a stand that it bypasses equanimity, heading at a rapid pace straight for obsequiousness. Neither willing to grasp the textures and rhythms of a slice-of-life piece nor interrogate its dilemma of a lifestyle clash between the generations, Shower contents itself with playing cute. Terminally cute.

Shower is attempting a variation on the city slicker-as-fish out of water, in this case a son returning from his success in some nebulous facet of urban life to revisit the more leisurely-paced existence of his brother and father. Obstensibly his visit revives long-standing feelings of animosity between his father and himself, but the film simply tells this rather than provides evidence. The result is a contrived, forced effort that carries little tension or effect. Early on it is clear that all will turn out fine for these nice people — we just have to stick around and watch.

The controversial bathhouse scene? Now way. There's nothing approaching controversy in Shower.

Moreover, while Shower seems to want to cherish the communal traditions of the bath house, its hackneyed gestures to do so prove ineffectual. The film is far too chaste to examine any sensual aspect of bathing or body maintenance. In the end, the bath house has more the feel of an antic-ridden gym locker room, filled with hurriedly-sketched "characters" taking a refuge from responsibility.

Director Zhang Yang made a name for himself as a music video director, but any stylistic flourish — even any hipness — this background might imply is sorely missing from Shower. On both the level of form and content, the film desires nothing more than to move quickly and efficiently from point A to point B, leaving in its wake a film that surprises only in its emptiness.

Shower is the equivalents of drinking a glass of milk: not bad for you, but completely lacking both edge and charm. The title implies a stark tale of modernity with slightly erotic undertones; the film itself delivers all the clout of the latest Disney cartoon and, perhaps for this reason, it has been eating up awards at various Western film festivals. It's a feel good film at which one can feel good because nothing much is going on; skip this Shower.

Shower ★ (out of five)

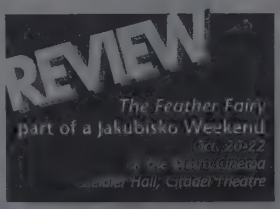
Feather Fairy a feat of pure imagination

BY JODI RAMER

Another instalment in Metro's ongoing series on Czechoslovak director Juraj Jakubisko is the 1985 film The Feather Fairy. Here, Jakubisko puts aside the lusty, zany, revolutionary fervour of some of his earlier work, which incorporated the carnivalesque and surreal, to gently render a Brothers Grimm story. Now, the carnivalesque and surreal certainly have a place in fairy tale and there's nothing demure about the work of those Grimm Brothers. This considered, Jakubisko is surprisingly constrained — I was waiting for things to turn bawdy and macabre at any time. Instead, The Feather Fairy actually rates as a kid's movie, as long as they can read the (fairly simplistic) subtitles and sit through 90 minutes of very un-Hollywood cinema.



The Feather Fairy really strikes me as a marvel. For one, it's rare to find an honest-to-goodness fantasy story with a rough-hewn European art cinema feel. The mix seems to be of the oil-and-water sort. Both kids and fantasy aficionados are attached to the glossy, convincing realization of fantastical scenarios through big budget special FX. The Feather Fairy is far from that. About the trickiest filmic sleight-of-hand it offers is some footage played backwards. But that's what is so enthralling about this fantasy film: it has real old-fashioned charm.

Jakubisko succeeds in creating a magical, otherworldly environment primarily through inventive set decoration. The Feather Fairy herself, it seems, is responsible for snow, for making the weather wintry and spring like in turn. Her lair is positively bewitching, filled with glowing orbs and crystalline mobiles, everything tinkles and sparkles and seems to be in a constant, bejeweled, mystical flux. Cleverly, the fairy must generate snow by jumping on her pink satin duvet, thus disturbing the down filling — feathers fly up and twirl in the air. Mirrors and colourful ribbons and jewelry are ubiquitous. This is a raven's dream world.

The cast as a whole exudes remarkable screen presence, an effect that can be difficult without the extra textual sway of star power. Some might recognize Giulietta Masina (Fellini's wife and frequent star). Her still-handsome face is kind but stern, necessary in a fairy tale godmother type. Here the Reaper is a crone, perfectly agreeable though she performs her task with relish and chicanery. Here teeth appear to be all individually wrapped in green tinfoil — the film is full of nice touches like this.

The hero of the story has the right boyish allure. And the heroine, with the soft, generous features of a Slavic doll, looks appropriately innocent and virtuous. Thankfully she also has a sensuality and sheer loveliness that add substance to that (potentially dismal) mode of femininity. Best of all is the wicked stepsister, who has the smoky dark countenance of a true femme fatale. Personally, watching her campy self-satisfied snarls and voraciousness (she's perpetually biting into pastries like they were a lover's mouth) I wondered how the hero could possibly resist her.

Surprisingly, despite thin material, The Feather Fairy is fanciful and evocative from start to finish. Its whimsical imagination expresses itself through everything — camera work, the setup of scenes, and especially art direction — and the imaginative vision doesn't dim. Both the heavenly world and the earthly world of a cosy peasant village are so vividly rendered you'll wish you could frolic between them. And The Feather Fairy offers very adult pleasures that no kids could find captivating. In terms of cinema in terms of fantasy, it is an artful, magical treat.

"Dogumentary" all about those wacky owners

BY SCOTT LINGLEY

Frequent readers of SEE's movie pages will have noted in recent weeks a despondence among our movie reviewers, concerning the current state of comedy. It's like nothing is funny anymore.

Then along comes Christopher Guest's Best in Show and makes us forget all the bad times. Like Guest's previous film, Waiting for Guffman, Best in Show follows a set of eccentric American types as they focus their very lives, on something completely frivolous. Guffman had its talent-free small-town stage musical and Best in Show has the pageant of canine pulchritude known simply as the dog show.

It's the owners we're interested in here, from the moment we meet Meg and Hamilton Swan (Parker Posey and Michael Hitchcock), a yuppie couple whose Weimaraner Beatrice has been traumatized by the sight of its owners in sexual congress. From there it's on to the Fleckses (Eugene Levy and Catherine O'Hara), a middle-class couple who sing songs to — and about — their Norwich terrier; John Michael Higgins and Michael McKean as a gay couple with a pair of hyper-manicured Shih-Tzus; Jennifer Coolidge, as a trophy wife whose standard poodle is her guide dog to forbidden love; and woodsman Harlan Pepper (Guest), whose love for his bloodhound is matched only by his passion for ventriloquism.

As you can see, Guest has once again mustered (with co-writer Levy) an ensemble of nutty characters full of gentle idiosyncrasies to poke fun at. And he's lined up a cast of capable friends with great timing and instincts. Sticking to the tried-and-true mockumentary approach (or dogumentary, if you like), Guest hardly appears to direct at all, letting the story unfold in concise but hilarious moments of character divulgence. Some of the schtick is a little creaky — the wise-cracking gay hairdresser, the formerly slutty Cookie Fleck's ongoing reunion with men she banged, Eugene Levy's reliably plausible squinting deadpan routine — but there's enough human and affectionate [illegible] that makes you want to go along with the gags one more time. Coolidge's trophy wife in particular is a wonderfully goofy take on a familiar trope.

Best in Show is reminiscent of Waiting for Guffman, but it also harkens back to the brilliant short films Guest put together with Billy Crystal, Harry Shearer and Martin Short during their SNL days (remember the short films for brothers who were planning to be the first male synchronized swimming team in Olympic history, once their swimming pool froze?). Those are the cinematic comedies I want to have of Saturday Night Live, not The Ladies Man or A Night at the Roxbury.

Jen Dunford [illegible] the Rocky Horror spirit at the anniversary screening of the cult fave at the Garneau Theatre

Rocky still warping minds

BY ANDREW HANON

Whatever you do, don't go out and rent The Rocky Horror Picture Show. You'll never understand one of the 20th century's pop cultural milestones unless you've cross-dressed and thrown dry toast into the air with scores of other sweet transvestites, half-naked brides-to-be, saucy French maids and Adonises in gold-lamé gonch.

When the film, an homage to 1950s space monster movies, was first unleashed in theatres in 1975, it was a flop. But like its own title figure, The Rocky Horror Picture Show rose from the dead and inexplicably became, according to its bizarre army of followers, "the greatest cult phenomenon of all time." A quarter century after Richard O'Brien's play was adapted for the screen, it still attracts new followers, some of whom weren't even born in 1975.

Twenty-nine-year-old Luke Kristjanson first saw it in 1989. "I was really struck with how unlike going to a regular movie it was. Usually, you go in, sit down and shut up, whether it's a good movie or not. But here was a bunch of people all having fun, dressing up in costumes and talking back to the screen."

For the next decade, Kristjanson attended screenings two or three times a year, usually dressed up as Riff Raff, the hunch-backed alien butler and time traveller. This summer he and a handful of other Rocky-ites began renting the Jasper Cinemas every three weeks, drawing as many as 60 faithful. But last weekend, 500 jammed into the Garneau Theatre for a special silver anniversary screening. The house was so full that one of the time-honoured audience antics — running two laps around the aisles during a chase scene — had to be forbidden, for fear of someone getting trampled.

The film's rabid cult following has exacted a strange toll on some cast members. It caused more than a few problems for Tim Curry, the mad scientist/ transvestite Dr. Frank N. Furter. Curry, a Shakespearean actor, played Furter in the original stage version, but it was not until he starred in the movie that his career lurched sideways. For several years afterwards, Rocky itself would show up whenever Curry performed in other plays screaming from the audience. It was more than a decade before Curry would even discuss the play publicly, for fear of setting off a fresh round of embarrassing antics.

But Curry's travails were nothing compared to those of Peter Hinwood, who played the title role, Dr. Furter's hunky creation. After the film was released, Hinwood backed out of the limelight, never to work in film again. Nowadays, he runs an antique shop in London and rumour has it he flies into a rage if The Rocky Horror Picture Show is even mentioned in his presence.

At the other end of spectrum, Richard O'Brien, who wrote the script, music and played Riff Raff, still revels in his notoriety as the creator of the phenomenon. He has worked steadily in theatre and music ever since, but according to the official RHPS fan Web site, he still his proudest achievement. "Rocky is a piece of trivia that appealed to a lot of people and given them a lot of pleasure. I guess you could say I'm proud to have done that."

The next showings of The Rocky Horror Picture Show at the Jasper Cinemas will be on Oct. 20, 21, 27 and 28 at 10:30 p.m. For information, call the box office at 489-1455.

Florida. Man, as long as she was lying about my age, though, couldn't she have made

Jesus' Son an indie great

Jesus' Son is why we have independent films. It goes where Hollywood doesn't dare and it marries style and content to create a whole new experience for its viewers. In doing do, it joins the ranks of great indie films like Henry: Portrait of a Serial Killer, Happiness, Down By Law and π. It's a story, but it's also a mood, a Moment and a whole microcosm.

The microcosm created here by director Alison Maclean is the warped and washed-out universe of the junkie. It's a world we've seen before, particularly in indie films, but never quite like this. Based on a collection of loosely autobiographical stories by Denis Johnson, Jesus' Son follows a drifter known only as Fuckhead (Billy Crudup) as he wanders through the 1970s in search of fixes and understanding.

It shares some characteristics with Naked Lunch and My Own Private Idaho, but the traits they share seem more like concordances than rip-offs.

The visual style — angular, listless, gauzy and grey — and the narrative structure place it on a shelf by itself. Let's talk about narrative structure for a moment. In the '80s, the only way to tell a story was to go from point A to point B. Flashbacks were passé. The Hollywood formula was set in cement. Then, in 1994, Pulp Fiction changed all that. Suddenly it was cool to jump around a bit.

Jesus' Son starts in the middle, jumps back, stumbles forward, doubles back, gets lost somewhere in the middle, wanders back to where it started and then goes somewhere else. But these aren't disconnected stories that have been awkwardly strung together. No, the narrative style means something. It shows us life through Fuckhead's eyes: a series of inexplicable moments that, somehow, push you forward until you're somewhere else. We see glimpses of what Fuckhead sees and try to assemble it for ourselves.

The actors are phenomenal and make the mood materialize even better than Adam Kimmel's cinematography. Billy Crudup gives us Fuckhead reeling on the edge of all the madness that surrounds him and then leaps into a sort of zen state that lets us move with him into the next bizarre adventure. Samantha Morton plays Michelle, his sometimes girlfriend, with a tender, desperate grace that makes it clear why Fuckhead loves her, even though he knows he's better off without her.

And there are great supporting turns by Denis Leary, Holly Hunter, Jack Black, Dennis Hopper and a tray of talking cotton balls. Everyone stays [illegible] moment in a film where the moment is the only thing [illegible] real. Fuckhead, as his name implies, is nobody; a mess [illegible] petual loser. He has no past [illegible] dwelling in and he has no future he can conceive of. That's [illegible] Now, and whether Now [illegible] emergency room, a drive [illegible] someone else's dream, it's [illegible] thing of beauty.

Dogma meets artifice in Dancer

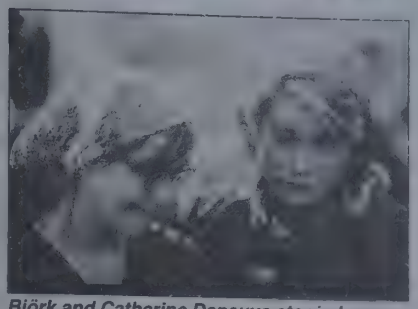
BY MARI SASANO

By now, we Edmontonians have had the complete Dogma 95 experience, beginning with Lars von Trier's Breaking the Waves, ending now with von Trier's markedly unchaste Dancer in the Dark. Although the esthetic of the hand-held camera and minimalism remains, this film delves into full-on artifice in that most artificial of genres, the musical.

Winner of the Palme d'Or at Cannes, Dancer in the Dark marks the remarkable acting début of Icelandic musical genius Björk, who also composed the songs and the score. Her performance is raw and unguarded, aided perhaps by von Trier's technique of fast cuts and multiple unrehearsed readings. Catherine Deneuve is also a brilliant piece of casting, as are the many supporting roles (Joel Grey as Czech musical star, Ulrich Novy!). Watch for Siobhan Fallon as Brenda, the tough-yet-tender prison guard.



Björk and Catherine Deneuve star in Lars von Trier's Dancer in the Dark.

REVIEW

Dancer in the Dark starring Björk opens Oct. 20
at the Garneau Theatre

Björk plays Selma, a Czech immigrant to the United States and single mother. She works in a factory by day, making extra money in the evenings by putting pinions on to their cardboard packaging. She is also slowly going blind, as is her son, from an hereditary condition. She must save enough money for an operation that will preserve her son's eyesight. What gets her through her day are her fantasies of American musicals, which spring to life whenever things get particularly rough.

The third in his trilogy of "Golden Heart" films (Breaking the Waves and The Idiots were the first two), this film returns to the theme of women who suffer through sacrifice. It's based on a Danish children's story about a girl who, despite being absolutely forsaken, gives away all of her possessions to the hungry, cold and needy. Selma's devotion to her son and her compassion for others' suffering ultimately leads to her downfall.

For the most part, people around her are unable to help her, nor does she ask for help. She harbours deep guilt for her situation, confessing, "I knew he would have bad eyes but I had him all the same."

Shot on digital video, Selma's life is drab, with a documentary feel to it until her musical fantasies cause everything to become vivid and colourful. The musical numbers were created by recording with 100 stationary DV cameras simultaneously rather than being carefully worked out shot-by-shot. The main reason we don't see many extravagant musicals these days is probably the sheer cost and effort of staging the dance sequences. This innovation works around those limitations and although it doesn't always showcase the dancing quite to satisfaction, one must nevertheless applaud the audacity to execute song-and-dance numbers on this scale.

Lars von Trier's intention was to create a musical of operatic proportions full of epic emotions, rather than the kind of light love stories à la Singin' in the Rain and its ilk. Dancer in the Dark slips easily into over-the-top melodrama and doesn't feel any shame about pulling a few emotional strings along the way. It is irresistible though excruciating. Why must Selma suffer so? When things come to their desperate conclusion, we are all helpless.

No one likes The Ladies (sic) Man

BY CRAIG ELLIOTT

There. Having established that every Saturday Night Live sketch that has been made feature-length, except The Blues Brothers and Wayne's World have been universal wastes of everything except time and money making them, I can safely say that I am not a particularly humourless person. Cultured types and humourless students, move it along. There is nothing to see here.

The rest of you, know this: Leon Phelps is what you would call a character, albeit a relatively unlikeable one. He's the host of a late-night radio show where he dispenses relationship advice to his listeners — to whom he is referring around in the bus when he's not wearing any underpants; to whom he is referring when he tells them to kiss it in the butt. When he's not broadcasting all the radio station, he can usually be found hanging around with his producer, Hillary from Fresh Prince of Bel-Air in the bar owned by his friend, Laudo Calrissian, or bonking married women on his desk at work, in the comfort of their own homes or somewhere else.

Now, most of the girls like Leon Phelps, but most of the boys don't. His station manager (poor old Eugene Levy) doesn't like him because his sex advice isn't good for much more than drawing letters of complaint; his mailman (poor old Kid in the Hall Kevin MacDonald) doesn't like him, I think because he has a big Afro and dresses disco; and all those husbands don't like him either because he sleeps with their wives and flees the scene when they get home, forever traumatizing them with the sight of his naked, tattooed ass beating its hasty retreat.

Because men run the world while the women are busy screwing Leon Phelps, Leon's life falls apart. He gets fired from his job and isn't very good at finding another one and all those husbands want to kill him. On the bright side, the possibility of Leon finding love, happiness and riches is raised via the arrival of an anonymously signed letter promising love, happiness and riches. What will happen? Who am I to spoil the surprise?

It sounds quite stupid because it is quite stupid. However, The Ladies Man (shouldn't there be an apostrophe in there somewhere?) is not flat-out, 100 per cent irredeemably awful. For example, to his credit, Meadows, a man renowned for his distinct unfunniness, takes his thoroughly ridiculous character and really runs with him — no winks, no tongues in cheek and if you'll allow one film-studies term, gives him a character arc. Also, it's funny when he says "the wang," it's funny when they get Julianne Moore to dress up like a clown and there are at least a couple of scenes that start out funny before, just like on the small-screen version of SNL, they keep going and going and going and never, ever stopping. Nice tries, though.

The Ladies Man
starring Tim Meadows
now playing
Cineplex Odeon/Famous Players

On that note, yes, of COURSE it would be better to see an SNL effort, big or small screen and besides the aforementioned alliteratives, with more than one marginal premise, just as, yes, it would be nice to see Will Ferrell try something other than the hey, that really shrill guy's got a weird hobby and he's probably gay and doesn't even realize it, hahaha guy. Suggestions: the hey, didn't that homeless bum used to have something going for him? guy, or the hey, someone just threw a pretzel through that guy's head? guy . . . what AM I trying to say? At least wait for it to hit the dollar theatres, okay?

Check out the typewriter that inscribed all these letters into this calf-skin in Blair Brennan's installation, About the Author, at Harcourt House Gallery.

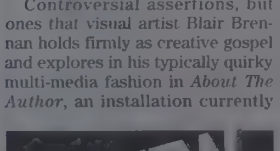
Invasion of the author

Blair Brennan gives new meaning to the phrase "hot type"

BY GILBERT A. BOUCHARD

Writing as a violent activity? Poetry as the stuff of slashed flesh and seared skin?

Controversial assertions, but ones that visual artist Blair Brennan holds firmly as creative gospel and explores in his typically quirky multi-media fashion in About The Author, an installation currently on display at Harcourt House Galley.



Citing Russian poet Velemir Khelbnikov, Brennan asserts that all poets who strive to dissect the human condition are "writing with a knife," in effect composing with "fire on skin" — an inherently violent action.

"Any writer who works in autobiography is cutting into themselves," explains Brennan, who lists a variety of introspective poets and experimental writers as inspirations for his current work. "Writing is a probing, incisive artform. Look at all the words we've used to talk about it, they're all so invasive."

The irony that almost all poets are nowhere near as violent in a real-world sense as the metaphoric psychic violence implied in their art is not lost on Brennan.

His installation playfully tweaks at this gaping chasm by creating a fantastic set of hyper-violent writing implements to replace the milquetoast tools of pen and paper, bringing real-life hyper-physical veracity — albeit in a humourous fashion — to this implied emotional fury.

Building on his recent fascination with branding irons and the marks they make, Brennan takes a literal swipe at the idea of writing with fire on skin by creating a fiery "writing desk," a gigantic lever-operated, functioning office-desk-sized typewriter with branding irons instead of keys and a tanned cow hide instead of paper.

Further underlining the inherent ugliness of the writing process, Brennan has taken no steps to make his piece pretty or esthetically pleasing. The intent is to deconstruct the "form follows function" of the process of creating text — a process that's inherently physical and production-oriented with magical, almost alchemic overtures.

A writer intending to use Brennan's fanciful typewriter (while fire regulations prohibit its demonstration in the gallery, the writing desk is totally functional), would discover that the blow torch that heats the keys is pointing straight at their head. Adds whole new meaning to deadline pressure and "writing under the gun," jokes Brennan.

Process rears its head in another part of Brennan's Harcourt show — a piece called Nine Words which pays homage to Canadian-born Brion Gysin and his novel The Process.

Like Brennan, Gysin didn't allow himself to be limited by genres of media and worked with "whatever medium was appropriate," often blurring the lines between visual and textual communication.

Given that Brennan's wife is a francophone anthropologist, the exploration about the deeper structural and procedural underpinnings of communication — written, oral or visual — is a big part of his life and one that he has no intention to shy away from, especially when discussions about the colonial nature of language and the deconstruction of its component underpinning is becoming an intellectually commonplace occurrence.

This particular installation also continues Brennan's exploration of the physical trace left by different forms of writing and the trouble some gap that many commentators and philosophers try to create between oral and textual communication.

A past project of Brennan's designed to explode the "myth of oral purity" included huge brands he forged to burn out a "smiley" symbol — a typed colon, hyphen, parenthesis :-) most commonly used in e-mail and on-line chats to denote humour or ironic statements.

"The smiley was invented because people were talking about computer communication as if it were an extension of oral conversation — they believed you needed to telegraph with a smiley that you were telling a joke because the person you were writing to couldn't see your body language to tell when you were kidding," concludes Brennan. "In reality computer communication is an extension of letter writing and people have been telling jokes in letters for years without having to use symbolic shorthand like the smiley."

Joey Tomato's: new look, same great food

BY GILBERT A. BOUCHARD

Talk about culinary night and day. On Sunday night I eat at the bohemian elegant Bistro Praha — a restaurant that's been around for years and seemingly hasn't changed its decor or its menu since the early '80s. The Bistro does a brisk trade in comfort and predictability, offering big dollops of consistency alongside continental offerings.

On Monday night we eat at the Joey Tomato's Mediterranean Grill on Jasper and 124 Street, an eatery that's a relative newkid on the block. Okay, it's been there for a few years — long enough for restaurant ennui to set in and dictate change — hence its recent makeover.

Obviously a different trade is being serviced here: a crowd that lounges for a side of change alongside their grilled chicken.

And when I say makeover, I mean makeover: the renovations were massive. Gone is the cavernous room, gone is the kitschy mock Italian decor and cluttered accouterments, gone are the post-modern exposed ducts and ceiling supports. In their place is a far more polished grown feel to the place — lower ceilings, raised floors, massive wine velvet draperies and a small private dining room at the door, two-sided fireplaces, weathered timbers in the lounge, cubby holes littered with vases and candlesticks and a subtle Minoan theme.

Not to give the impression that Joey Tomato's really needed a renovation. The joint certainly wasn't looking shabby, nor was it ever particularly slow. But in a competitive business, you have to be a step or two ahead or you'll find yourself off the path altogether.

Whatever the logic, it worked: the joint was packed when the Scooby Review Gang showed up for a late supper, necessitating that we cool our jets lazing about on the over-stuffed couch and chairs facing one of the fireplaces.

As far as I can tell the menu hasn't changed too much since the renovation, but I can be mistaken as they seem to change the menu on a regular basis anyway.

Ray decides not to stray far from his traditional order and goes for their cernfied Angus nine-ounce Sirloin while I order a pizza, the second pizza I've ordered at Joey. Last week I'd visited on a business lunch and ordered the Tandoori (loaded with tasty chutney and peppers but really, really hot), so tonight I decide to go for the Italian Sausage. Michel, being a vegetarian finds offerings a bit more limited. Eventually he decides on the Vegetarian Lettuce Wraps.

Despite the fact that the room is hopping, the entrees come to the table in no time. Ray's steak is a really superior cut of m[illegible] to buttery perfection and sided [illegible] rack of smokey prawns; a heap of tomato lin guini and a big slice of garlic toasted Italian bread.

Same deal with my pizza, a really nice thin crusted wonder. Nowhere as hot as the Tandoori, my pie is a gooey, cheesy circle of goodness — very fresh, very crispy and the perfect size for a hungry camper.

Michel is also more than satisfied with his do-it-yourself veggie wraps which, while tasty looking, wouldn't have been my first choice in that I'm way too slow to be able to handle any assembling past cocktail hour.

While the entrees were filling, we still decide to split a dessert — the Forno Baked Apple Pie, an offering I can't praise highly enough. Fresh baked with tart Granny Smith apples, this open faced one serving puff-pastry mini-pie is a sweet neo-traditional treat and comes topped with decadent warm caramel sauce and Canadian maple ice cream.

You are going to laugh yourself silly when you win double guest passes to Rapid Fire Theatre's Chimprov and cool Sgt. Pepper-style Theatresports posters this week. To win, call the SEE contest hotline at 430-9043 Friday between 1 and 1:15 p.m. and tell us where Rapid Fire plays. If our machine answers, don't leave a message. Just dial again. (You cannot win if you have won a prize from SEE in the last month.)

You could also win tickets to see the musical production of Kink! featuring the song stylings of Paul Morgan Donald and the lovely and talented Kimberley Carroll, as a pin-up model. To win one of those passes, call the SEE contest hotline at 430-9043 Friday between 1 and 1:15 p.m. and tell us the name of that pin-up girl. If our machine answers, don't leave a message. Just dial again. (You cannot win if you have won a prize from SEE in the last month.)

This week you could win double guest passes to see The Tao of Steve. It's now playing at the Princess Theatre. To win one of those passes, call the SEE contest hotline at 430-9043 Friday between 1 and 1:15 p.m. and tell us the name of a certain fictional bear whose name appeared in the title of a book called The Tao of . . . If our machine answers, don't leave a message. Just dial again. (You cannot win if you have won a prize from SEE in the last month.)

We're also giving away three pairs of tickets to the Captain Tractor concert at Red's, in West Edmonton Mall, Friday Oct. 20. To win, call the SEE contest hotline at 430-9043 Friday between 1 and 1:15 p.m. and tell us the title of the band's most recent CD. If our machine answers, don't leave a message. Just dial again. (You cannot win if you have won a prize from SEE in the last month.)

You could also win double guest passes to any retro movie playing at the Jasper Cinema during the month of October. Call us at 430-9043 Friday between 1 and 1:15 p.m. and tell us the name of the college located nearest the Jasper Cinema. If our machine answers, don't leave a message — you can't win that way. Just dial again. (And another thing: you cannot win if you have won a prize from SEE in the last month.)

If you're looking for even more popcorn, you can win passes to see Girl on the Bridge, playing at the Princess II. Just call us at 430-9043 Friday between 1 and 1:15 p.m. and tell us the name of a bridge that isn't the High Level Bridge. If our machine answers, don't leave a message — you can't win that way. Just dial again. (And another thing: you cannot win if you have won a prize from SEE in the last month.)

The Garneau Theatre is also showing a pretty swell film that you could go see it, too. For double guest passes to Dancer in the Dark call us at 430-9043 Friday between 1 and 1:15 p.m. and tell us the name of the Icelandic singer who is featured in the film. If our machine answers, don't leave a message — you can't win that way. Just dial again. (And another thing: you cannot win if you have won a prize from SEE in the last month.)

With the bright forecast of Edmonton's economic future, the merchants on 124 Street are gearing up for the prime season in retail.

With an eclectic mixture of shops, fine restaurants, bistros and home of the popular "Gallery Walk," we are again anointing the name that we acquired at the turn of the century, "the premier shopping area in Edmonton's west end."

We invite you to shop on 124 Street – "a small town in the heart of the city" – where merchants pride themselves on good old fashioned quality and personal service.

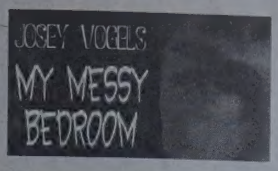
in a glass, and besides, I like pudding and mashed potatoes. And what's more,

All the sex news that's unfit to print

It's been a heavy fall. I feel like we could all use something to talk about besides the naming of mountains or your favourite P.E.T. memory. Allow me to offer you some tasty tidbits to share at your next cocktail party.



Crime of passion

I admit I got a thrill as a young teen when I would walk out of George's jean store in Bowmanville, Ont. with a pair of brand-new pants under my old jeans, but this was nothing like the thrill one German woman gets when she shoplifts. Known to Germans as Baerbel B, this 41-year-old woman has been caught shoplifting on a number of occasions. The weird thing was she often shoplifted things she couldn't possibly want or need, like dog food when she doesn't own a dog, or shoes that were the wrong size. Charges against her were previously dropped when a judge concluded she couldn't be responsible for her actions. When she recently went before a judge after stealing a $73 hammer drill, she explained her motivation: "I have an orgasm whenever a department-store detective discovers me stealing and grabs my shoulder from behind," she told the court. The judge didn't buy her story. He threw her in jail for 14 months.

Phone sex in Japan

It's illegal to distribute porn in Japan. And they mean business. Punishment for offenders can be up to two years in prison or a 2.5-million-yen fine ($23,500 US).

Porn distributors tried to sneak stuff through via the Internet. In the first six months of this year, police made 201 "network-based crime" arrests, more than half related to porn and child prostitution. According to Japan's courts, any site with links to a porn site is now considered illegal.

So where does a poor Japanese citizen turn to for his porn fix? Why, his cell phone of course. The NTT DoCoMo's i-mode cell-phone service has been discovered to be ideal for downloading porn images from Web sites. Porn-hounds across Japan are now surreptitiously peeking at and murmuring into their phones on subway trains or at their desks. So much so, in fact, that police recently made two arrests, the first time anyone has been charged with distributing porn through a mobile phone.

NTT DoCoMo, of course, claims no responsibility for any lecherous use of their technology. They attempt to screen the contents of all their "official" i-mode sites, but insist it's impossible to verify contents of the thousands of unofficial sites that can be accessed through their service.

You know it won't be long for the rest of the world to catch on. So if you're wondering why the guy on the cell phone next to you looks a little flushed . . .

What a dick!

It's all fun and games until someone gets a steel bearing stuck on their dick. The boys were having a brew down at the local pub in Ramincu Valcea, Romania, when they decided to get a little competitive. It may not be an Olympic sport — yet — but the competition was simply this: Who had the biggest penis?

One 43-year-old guy decided to be clever and secure his victory by securing a steel bearing around the base of his penis to keep it erect. Nice strategy, or so it seemed, until the bearing became stuck and he spent the next three days in agonizing pain trying to get the damn thing off while trying to act like nothing was wrong in front of his wife and kids. When he was almost unable to walk, he finally went to hospital where it took a three-hour operation — during which they cut and drained his penis — to get the bearing off.

The doctor who performed the operation said that unlike another situation he'd seen like this where they were able to cut the object off, "This bearing was from the wheel of a crane and was toughened steel and we would have had to use an acetylene cutter to get the bearing off. Instead I cut open the penis and drained it to solve the problem." The man and his penis are fine and resting, though the report did not say whether the poor guy won the contest.

The case against Nader

Q: Why am I voting for Ralph Nader? It's the issues, man! Nader stands for several things that neither Bush nor Gore stand for.

—A real commitment to campaign finance reform

—Ending the drug war

—Ending the death penalty

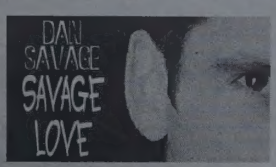
—The right to choose

—Ending the rule of corporations in our culture

And for the shallow: Ani DiFranco, Eddie Vedder, Susan Sarandon, Tim Robbins, Ben Harper, Phil Donahue and Michael Moore all support Nader. That covers the dykes, the loser dropouts, the intellectual film fans, the hippies, the housewives and the unemployed. With Nader in this race, we don't have to choose between the lesser of two evils!

Nader fan in NYC

Hey, NFINYC: Ralph Nader is not "in this race," and no celebrity endorsement or kick-ass position supporting legalization is going to change him. While it may not be much fun having to choose between the lesser of two evils, that's the choice adult voters are faced with this year. Ralph Nader is a vanity candidate running a vanity campaign for a Potempkin party, the Greens. And while Al Gore may not be perfect, he's better than Bush. If Nader voters manage to put Bush in the White House next year some of your fellow citizens (women, queers, the poor) are going to pay a high price for your refusal to grow up and make the real choice you're faced with which, again, is a choice between Bush and Gore. You may have to grit your teeth when you vote Gore, but that's a small price to pay to keep the environment, the poor and the English language from the harm George W. Bush will surely do all three.



Yes, yes, I know: Ralph is better on the issues. So's my mom. Actually, on some issues, my mom is better than Ralph. But my mom isn't a serious candidate for president and neither is Ralph "Vanity Candidate" Nader.

Q: Up here in Canada, it is evident that America is in a political crisis. Your two-party system does not allow for real choice. Canadians, on the other hand, have many more choices. Our official third parties are the New Democratic Party (a bunch of socialists who gave us free health care) as well as the Bloc Quebecois (a bunch of French separatists who made us bilingual), the Green Party and CRAP (Canadian Reform Alliance Party who would like to make Canada safe for fascists). Canuck politics are more accepting of dissent and subversive viewpoints than American politics could ever hope to be. Our elected officials are pushing for the legalization of prostitution, First Nation rights, gay adoption, bicycle lanes and universal composting. Eat your hearts out, Nader-lovers.

Freak in Toronto

Hey, FIT: Just in case my Nader-loving friends manage to put George W. Bush in the White House next year, would someone up there send me some information about emigrating to Canada? I have solid computer skills, make decent money, I'm in good health and won't be a burden on your health care system. I'm aware that you have a prime minister, but a president and I promise not to live in an igloo, eat blubber or ride around on a dog sled. Hey, I even speak a little French. Is there anything else I need to know to pass a citizenship test?

Telephone Chat-Lines – Almost Mainstream

ADVERTISEMENT

Social interaction is a basic human need. People who are tired of the same old, same old can generally add a little excitement to their lives by meeting new people. Meeting new people can lead to the creation of another group of friends, new activities and maybe even a new love interest.

When it comes to meeting new people, some take a wait and see attitude and rely on things like chance meetings through friends, the workplace, health clubs, or might even decide to heavy up on the bar scene. Other people who are tired of waiting and want immediate interaction can choose to interact with people over the internet or through a telephone chat line.

For many people the internet option works fine if pure boredom relief is the ultimate goal. The major downside to this format is not really knowing what the person at the other end of the keyboard is really like or where they are from. They could be young, or old, or even male or female, and you wouldn't know it. It can be pretty emotionally upsetting to find out that you thought you were having fun with a 25 year old female when you eventually find out you were actually messaging a man twice your age. Even if an interesting relationship does develop, the chance of actually meeting an internet friend has been shown to be extremely slim.

To overcome some of the downside to internet chat, the last few years has seen telephone based chat systems become widely accepted. A telephone based chat system confidentially links both men and women primarily from the local area. It offers all the same interactions as if you were simply talking on the phone, but your true identity is not revealed to the people you are talking with – until you're ready to reveal it. Telephone chat is usually always free for women and can be a great way to meet someone new. From the conversations, you will be able to easily identify that you are talking with someone of the opposite sex and also be able to get a good idea of their age. Then, if you decide you want to actually meet face-to-face with someone, the telephone chat system is locally based, and the other person is likely from the same area as you.

One telephone system called the GrapeVine, actually combines the benefits of internet chat with telephone chat. In addition to being able to interact with local callers, it also lets you interact with other callers from right across Canada – if you choose to do so.

More than ever, people tired of things like the bar scene have turned to the fun and discreet world of the telephone chat system. Whether you're looking for your soul mate, or just to have a few hours of fun, check out the advantages of telephone chat.

WOMEN SEEKING MEN

This is Tina. I'm an attractive, 27 yr. old woman who's looking to find her Prince Charming. I enjoy reading, horseback riding & spending time with my daughter. If you're between 25-35 yrs. of age, are financially stable, romantic, employed, good-looking & enjoy pampering the women in your life, leave a message. Box 5805.

I'm a single, 39 yr. old female looking for a male between 38-47 yrs. of age to spend time with. He must be open, honest & trustworthy. He must be physically active & enjoy trying new things. But most of all, have a great sense of humour. Box 2212.

I'm pretty fit, 30 yrs. old & stand 5'9" at 145 lbs. with brown eyes & long, brown hair. I like to smoke, but am trying to quit. I'm a very sociable drinker & like to dance, have fun, meet new people & travel. I look just as good in a dress as I do in a pair of jeans. I love animals & would like to have children one day, but I'm not in a big rush at the moment. I just got back into town & am looking to meet some new people. If you're out , give me a shout. Box 5645.

I'm a 5'2", medium-built, 44 yr. old woman with short, dark hair & hazel eyes. I'm told I'm attractive, honest & fun to be with. I have numerous interests & hobbies, am employed full-time & am very secure in aspects. I enjoy quiet times & quality times. I have no dependants & I'm very single with no baggage. I enjoy a man who's fun-loving, sociable, helpful & enjoys the comfort of a very strong, healthy relationship with a one-man woman. I don't play golf, but enjoy all other outdoor & indoor activities. I'm a good talker & listener. I'm compassionate & passionate with a zest for life. Box 6655.

This is Nicole. I'm a 24 yr. old, Libra standing 5'2" at 160 lbs. with long, brown, curly hair & bright, green eyes. I'm a single mother of 2 boys. My interests include racing cars in the summer and in the winter I follow hockey. I'm not sure what I'm looking for, but hopefully I can meet a few new friends & take it from there. Box 4872.

MEN SEEKING WOMEN

I'm 29 yrs. old & stand 6' tall at 230 lbs. with blue eyes & blond hair. I'm a big guy with a heart of gold. I'm an aircraft mechanic by trade. I was in the air force for 7 yrs. & have been out now about 3. I'm just looking for Mrs. Right to grow old with, rely on & maybe start a family with. That woman who wants to make each other a priority above everything else. Someone to go out & do things with. I'm a very spontaneous, loving guy & my friends consider me a very generous & thoughtful guy who'd give the shirt off his back to help somebody. Box 1796.

My name's Mark. I'm 27 yrs. old & stand 6' tall with brown hair & blue eyes. I'm looking for friendship & possibly a long-term relationship with a really special lady. I'm very romantic, passionate & definitely looking for the same. I'm very outgoing, adventurous & spontaneous with a zest for life. I like camping, biking, swimming & dancing. I love taking long walks, travelling, outdoor picnics, barbecues & more. Box 8173.

I'm a 43 yr. old, divorced, white male standing 5'7" at 155 lbs. with brown hair & deep-blue eyes. I do smoke & am a social drinker. To be honest, I'm looking for someone between the ages of 35-45 who looks after herself. I'm an honest & caring person & I do consider myself to be attractive & fit. I get along with almost everyone & am usually in an upbeat mood from morning 'til night. I enjoy the great outdoors as much as the great indoors. I like to dance & listen to most music, except rap. I enjoy spending a weekend afternoon preparing a gourmet meal for that special someone, complete with candles, wine & soft music. Box 2266.

I'm a great guy. I'm 5'11" & 185 lbs. with brown hair with blond highlights & blue eyes. I'm in Southern Alberta & am looking for someone in this area who shares some of my interests. My interests include hockey, wrestling, playing road hockey, softball, rollerblading, going for walks & playing pool as well as going to movies. If you have similar interests, get back to me. Box 5343.
